FROM THE MASTER OF MACABRE MANGA - GO NAGAI!

VIOLENCE JACK

AVAILABLE FOR THE FIRST TIME ON VIDEO!

Violence Jack does not make for easy viewing. While Go Nagai's work is often noted for its sometimes suspect sexual tendencies and high gore factor, the humor with which he tempers many of his stories is missing here.

Jack's world is a place of arbitrary and unremitting horror, where death stalks the weak and where innocence is ravaged by the strong - unless they wise up quick. And yet, Nagai shows us that even in this survival-of-the-fittest slaughterhouse, moral choices must be made.

First serialized in Shonen Magazine in 1973, Violence Jack was Go Nagai's first real attempt at creating and exploring his own world. To do this, he subjected Japan to an appalling series of earthquakes.

Cut off from all civilization and ravaged by disease and starvation, the surviving population of this new tomb of earth descended quickly into barbarism, doomed to a life of grubbing subsistence and harried by roaming bands of vicious psychopaths.

NOT RATED. EDITED VERSIONS. PARENTAL DISCRETION ADVISED. CONTAINS VIOLENCE, EXPLICIT LANGUAGE AND MATURE SITUATIONS.

Released from his concrete tomb by Section A, Jack agrees to fight for them, against their enemies. But no one in this tomb-city is as innocent as they claim, and as an all-out war erupts between the Sections, Jack must decide where his loyalties lie before the inhabitants of Evil Town wipe each other out!

Street Date: 9/24/96

Jack is caught in the crossfire when the gang attacks another settlement and he vows to fight for the villagers. But the "Hell's Wind" biker army have some nasty surprises in store and military resources at their disposal. Can even Violence Jack withstand the massed firepower of Hell's Wind?

Street Date: 10/22/96

A huge comet erupts from the depths of space, hurling into the Earth with the force of a thousand hydrogen bombs. Slumking has risen to power in the corpse-strewn wasteland that was once Japan. Only Violence Jack, the ultimate spirit of death and retribution, has the courage to challenge his rule.

BARRY WINDSOR-SMITH STORYTELLER

On our cover:

Creator Barry Windsor-Smith had this to say about Adastra, the muscular and enchanting goddess who appears on our cover and the cover of Barry Windsor-Smith: Storyteller #3, "She's kind of grinning and looking down. The great thing about that picture is that it pretty much just fell out of the pencil; it's not as if I had to sit there and ask how she would show herself. I mean, she would be strong and battling if she chose to be, but here she is, first time on a cover, so she's a little bit embarrassed about it!"

Editorial

By Maggie Thompson

We talk in our field about action-adventure. We see films and read comics in which people experience crises. Joe Kubert's gripping Fax from Sarajevo is one of the rare cases in which someone I have met has endured perils and recounted a personal view. Today, I have just finished talking with a woman who works with my daughter in New York City. Earlier this week, she (the woman, not Valerie) had taken a routine American flight which was scheduled to land at LaGuardia. What followed was a nightmare. The instruments apparently did not tell the pilot that his landing gear was not down — but by a strange twist of fate he had changed his landing plans into a maneuver which averted destruction. It was a crash landing, but everyone walked away (except the few who had broken ankles).

I'd never spoken to anyone who has been through such an ordeal; I think all of us who have to fly try to put this sort of thing out of our minds, once we've located the nearest emergency exit. But she experienced some things I found surprising:

• "People in the exit aisles were told, 'Don't let people jump out until you're sure the engines are off.' " The danger was being sucked into operating engines. "But the plane was on fire and people were screaming. One of the passengers in the exit aisle later told me, 'I didn't know what to do, because I couldn't hear whether or not the engines were off. I finally ended up trusting the people on the ground, who were telling me to jump.' "

• People were told to leave behind all personal belongings, including shoes. The result was that passengers ended up on the tarmac, covered with fire-extinguisher foam and without coats or shoes — for half an hour. "Everyone was running into each other. We didn't have blankets or shoes or anything hot to drink, and it was the middle of the night. Thank goodness it wasn't February."

• She said the emergency people — firemen, paramedics, and so on — were "really great. They had their priorities straight." But other experiences, with staff which apparently had had little training in emergencies, were less positive. "They finally took us inside the airport, and we waited there for two hours. We were free to go after two hours without our luggage. If we wanted to wait for the FAA to 'release' the plane, we would then get our carry-on items. I decided to wait, and the wait was two more hours. They eventually told us the airline would issue us car vouchers so we could get home and they gave us detailed instructions on where we should go in the airport to locate someone with car vouchers. I started to walk down the hall until it hit me suddenly.

"Why should we have to wander around an airport in the middle of the night to try to locate a place where someone would be available to issue us car vouchers? I turned from a plane-crash victim into a nasty New Yorker." She laughed, though a bit shakily. "I walked back down the hall and said to the staffer, 'I'm not going looking for a voucher! I'm going to sit in this chair, and you're going to bring the ^%@!+ car voucher to me!" She finally left the airport at 3:30 a.m.; her flight had been scheduled to land at 10 p.m.

She said she'd spoken with one of the workers when she was standing on the tarmac and he'd said, "I've worked here 15 years and never seen anything this bad." But even making allowances for this having been an unusually bad situation, it raises questions for me:

1) First and most basic, shouldn't there be a routine emergency procedure for notifying those on board as to whether the engines have stopped?

2) Given that an emergency evacuation will require leaving footwear, carry-ons, and coats behind, shouldn't some responding airport team be immediately responsible for providing warm coverings and some sort of one-or-two-sizes-fits-all slipper-boot — and/or immediate bus transport to the terminal? (The victims were given blankets and slippers — when they were finally inside the terminal.)

3) Emergency and emt people were available on standby throughout. But shouldn't some responding airport teams also be immediately responsible for bustling about to monitor passengers concerning slightly less life-threatening needs — with staff added as necessary and extra transport on immediate call?

(4) Given that the experience will be a novelty to those concerned, shouldn't there be an FAA printed flyer available for early handout to notify passengers of what they can expect, what they should do, and what their rights are?

I've always assumed that these four steps have been standard operating procedure for decades. Since they're not, why not?

Barks Studio says 'unexpurgated' collection not authorized, endorsed

The Carl Barks Studio issued a press release Friday, Nov. 1 stating that the upcoming new comic album The Unexpurgated Carl Barks, a collection of public-domain material from Hamilton Comics/Another Rainbow, is neither authorized nor endorsed by Carl Barks.

The relationship between the Bruce Hamilton Company/Another Rainbow/Gladstone and Carl Barks ended almost four years ago. Carl Barks Studio Manager Bill Grandey said, "Barks-authorized new projects at that time came to an end."

He added that the sale of Another Rainbow's remaining stock of signed Barks lithographs was participated in and is supported by Barks. Barks has ended his participation in new Another Rainbow Barks porcelain figurines.

Plans for release of The Unexpurgated Carl Barks, a 6x9˝ $9.95 trade paperback, were reported in Comics Buyer's Guide #1199, and an advertisement appeared on the back cover of CBG #1200.

"The announcement of a new Barks book from Hamilton Comics/Another Rainbow caught Barks unaware," Grandey said. "The new 'R-rated' book was not sanctioned by Barks. No compensation has been proposed for Barks. The lack of recognition is reminiscent of the decades Barks worked on the Disney duck comics at Western Publishing. He was recognized anonymously as 'The Good Artist.'"

Kathy Morby, also of The Carl Barks Studio, said, "This unendorsed 'R-rated' Barks book of naked women is a departure for The Bruce Hamilton Co., a Disney publishing licensee. It features Barks' work from earlier than 1935. It is well-known that Barks worked at a men's magazine, The Calgary Eye-Opener. The cartoon material is now public domain. Barks' Calgary cartoons have been reprinted in the new, sold-out Gemstone Publishing book Animal Crackers, Mike Barrier's Barks Biography Book, and The Carl Barks Library."

Hamilton/Another Rainbow described the trade paperback as reprinting 120 drawings from 1928 to 1936, including what Hamilton said are probably the first drawings Barks drew for The Calgary Eye-Opener.

Responding to the statement from The Carl Barks Studio, Hamilton/Another Rainbow/Gladstone owner Bruce Hamilton told CBG, "Another Rainbow/Gladstone has profound respect for the integrity of the full body of the life's work of Carl Barks, and it has always been our goal to print everything we can that he has done, and we are as close to that goal as we'll ever get. The Unexpurgated Carl Barks is the missing link. We know for a fact that a similar book is in the works in Europe, but ours will hit the market first, and there is no doubt in our minds whatsoever that ours will be by far the best. The book offers tremendous insights into the breadth of the man's abilities, humor, and intellect. Many precursors of ideas that carried over into his animation days and, later, into his comic books originated in the Eye-Opener."

Hamilton denied that the project was guilty of any "lack of recognition" of Barks. "The Unexpurgated Carl Barks is a truthful, penetrating, and comprehensive overview of his early works, lovingly put together," he said. "In no way, should anyone — not our company, nor the Barks Studio, nor his fans, nor even Carl himself feel a need to apologize or to be disheartened by this inclusion of the first chapter of his varied career."

Hamilton also objected to Morby's characterization of the project as an "R-rated Barks book of naked women." Calling her description "a gross distortion," Hamilton said, "It is true that a percentage of the gags are not 'politically correct' by 1990s public mores, but they were acceptable then, and any apologies, explanations, justifications, or waffling today would simply be to deny history. We think the public will be delighted with the book, will find it funny, charming — even enlightening. It does not — repeat: not — in any way cast aspersions on Barks or paint him in any unfavorable light. Of the 120 drawings, three contain nudes: one of mermaids, tastefully drawn; one with the women's backs turned that I wouldn't hesitate to show my 8-year-old grandson; and one with tiny, unrecognizable figures a half-inch tall. Hardly raunchy stuff."

Hamilton said the cartoons that were chosen for the book have not been seen by many collectors. "Even the most serious collectors have never seen 95% of the 800 to 1000 that were published," he said. "We are not paying Barks royalties, because he and the Studio have dissociated themselves. Since all the material is in the public domain, we have rights, as do the Europeans, to reprint all they or we want. Barks has also become — thanks in large part to our own efforts, no longer recognized by the Studio — a public figure, which entitles us to recognize him as the source of this great and important work."

Hamilton said the cartoons in the book were selected from a collection of twice as many, and the company hopes to release a second volume if response to the first one is enthusiastic.

Spider-Man, X-Men lead Toy Biz to successful third quarter

In its third-quarter report, Toy Biz Inc. announced a 43% increase in net sales for the year. Net sales for the first nine months of last year totaled $117 million; this year's net sales for the first three quarters reached $167.6 million. Net income for the year increased by 15% to $19.2 million.

Net income for the quarter of $11.4 million was an increase of 20% over last year's third-quarter earnings of $9.5 million. Net sales for the quarter increased 42% over last year's third quarter to $83.4 million.

Toy Biz President and CEO Joseph M. Ahearn said the figures reflect increases across all five of the company's key areas of operation. The largest growth was seen in international shipments, which increased more than 120% to $19.9 million, which the company said was due to the ongoing success of Spider-Man, Hercules, and Xena toys.

Boys' toys domestic net sales increased 25% to $26.3 million, led by strong sales in Spider-Man and X-Men action figures. Ahern said that, as a result of increased shipments of action figures overseas, total net sales of boys' toys were $44.6 million, an increase of 51% compared to sales of a year ago.

Girls' promotional dolls domestic net sales increased 36% to $23.6 million, led by Take Care of Me Twins and the expanded Baby Tumbles/Baby Headstand line.

Gerber brand nonpromotional dolls and infant/preschool toys increased 38% to $6.5 million, due to shipment of the new Gerber Fruit Babies line. Activity toys' domestic net sales increased 26% to $6.3 million.

Toy Biz' growth is in stark contrast to the performance of Marvel Entertainment, which owns most of Toy Biz' Class B common stock. With debts falling due, Marvel recently spun Toy Biz off as a separately offered company in order to raise capital.

Ahearn said variations in gross profit and overhead margins, compared to the same period last year, are the result of Toy Biz' success in building new product categories and areas of operation on top of its strong base in boys' action figures.

The third-quarter report stated that uncertainties for Toy Biz in the future are tied in part to US trade relations with China because of the company's dependence on Chinese manufacturers.

Market Guide

Dennis Queally, Joseph Koch Inc., 206 41st St., Brooklyn, NY 11232.

Queally reported Joseph Koch's best-seller is Legion of Super Heroes from both eras. "Recently, we've gotten LOSH orders every day!" said Queally.

In Silver Age titles, Thor and Amazing Adventures — especially issues with Neal Adams art — are in high or increasing demand among Koch's customers.

Chris Barchuk, Wizard World Inc., 51 Rockland Center, Nanuet, NY 10954.

"Bad Girl" titles are "fading fast," said Barchuk. "Second printings are driving fans away."

Silver Age titles in high demand among Wizard World customers include Incredible Hulk #181 and #182, Iron Fist, all early X-Men, and Marvel Premiere #15 (with Iron Fist's first appearance).

Popular modern titles include Nightwing, Aquaman, Iron Man, all Spider-Man titles, Witchblade #2, The Darkness, Legionnaires, Legion of Super-Heroes, Scud, and Johnny the Homicidal Maniac, said Barchuk. Barchuk said he has seen decreasing demand for Lady Death, Shi, Evil Ernie, Spawn, Superman: The Wedding Album, Poison Elves, Hellblazer, and Gen^{13}.

Overall, Barchuk said, business has been good at Wizard World, "but there is nothing generating steam like Gen^{13} or Preacher did."

Dave Braunstein, Eldorado Comics, P.O. Box 3630, 2110 E. Rt. 70, Cherry Hill, NJ 08034.

Braunstein reported mail-order and convention sales have been so strong that Eldorado has decided to reopen its store. "We see significant opportunity for a full-service comics shop that stocks a wide selection of back issues and comics-related items," said Braunstein.

Braunstein said his customers will pay $600 to $700 for Near Mint copies of Incredible Hulk #181, Giant-Size X-Men #1, and X-Men #94. "Customers are asking for strict Near Mint copies, which are getting harder and harder to find," he said. Although high-grade Marvels generally sell easily at guide, Braunstein said, "low and mid-grade Marvels continue to be soft and require discounting to sell."

Other Silver Age titles enjoying steady demand among Eldorado customers include titles featuring characters slated for the next Batman movie, such as Batman #121 (Mr. Freeze), Batman #181 (Poison Ivy), and Detective #359 (Batgirl). "Unfortunately, these comic books are hard to find in high grade," said Braunstein.

Among modern titles, Cry for Dawn limited editions and the Dawn series continue to be sought after by Linsner fans, said Braunstein. Titles that are starting to draw steady back-issue attention among Eldorado customers include Akiko, Kurt Busiek's Astro City, Animal Mystic, Babylon 5, DV8 Rave, Gen^{13} #½, I, Lusiphur #3, Impulse, Miracleman, Oz, Scud, Shi, Spawn, Star Wars titles, Weapon Zero, and Witchblade.

"Darkchylde is selling strong, as people anticipate this to be the 'next hot comic book' since Witchblade," said Braunstein. Braunstein also recommended keeping an eye on The Darkness. Braunstein said he continues to see sinking demand for such "Bad Girl" titles as Double Impact, Razor, and Lady Death. "The demand on Preacher and Hitman is also decreasing," said Braunstein, "as most collectors have picked up the issues that they need to complete their run."

Braunstein reported his convention sales have been down during the past month. "I'm not quite sure why, but it may be that there are too many shows competing for a limited number of fan dollars."

Recent noteworthy sales:

Golden Age: Randy Kesserling of Comic Man in Plymouth, Mich., reported a sale of Superman #1 with a "mouse-chew" for $10,500.

Gerry Ross of 1,000,000 Comics in Champlain, N.Y. reported a sale of Batman #1, restored, in F to VF for $10,500. Ross also sold Action Comics #101 (which carries an atom bomb cover) in F- for $280.

John and Diane Hauser of New Berlin, Wis., reported selling the following runs from a collection that surfaced in Neenah, Wis.: Detective #80-#160 for $33,000, World's Finest Comics #11-#50 for $8000, and Star Spangled Comics #65-#105 for $7500. The Hausers also reported a sale of More Fun #101 in G to VG for $1100.

Silver Age: The Hausers reported sales of Fantastic Four #1 in Fair condition for $400, Captain America #100 in VF for $200, and Flash #112 in F+ for $150.

Diamond hires former Capital City co-owner, employees

Diamond Comic Distributors has hired several persons formerly associated with Capital City Distribution, including former Capital City co-owner John Davis and former Capital City Vice President of Product Management Tom Flinn. Davis has joined Diamond as Director of Special Projects. Flinn will become Diamond's director of purchasing as part of a general expansion of Diamond's purchasing department, which will also involve the absorption of several other former Capital City staff members.

Davis will work from Diamond's new Madison, Wis., office and report to Diamond Vice President of Marketing Roger Fletcher. Projects under Davis' supervision will include researching alternative distribution channels for non-comics products; implementing collection-storage supply runs in various metropolitan areas; working with Diamond's new field rep program; and helping to develop international markets by lending support to current customers and seeking new ones.

Davis said, "I am really excited to have the opportunity to work for Diamond and continue my efforts to expand the market for comics and other related American entertainment forms throughout the world."

A graduate of the University of Wisconsin, Davis founded Capital City with Milton Griepp in 1980, building it into one of the industry's key distributors. Davis and Griepp sold selected assets of Capital City to Diamond in July.

Diamond President and CEO Steve Geppi said, "John's 20 years of distribution experience and the strong relationships he's built in our industry will be a valuable asset to Diamond, as we strive to improve our service to retailers and suppliers alike."

The new purchasing department will function under a team-based approach, with individual purchasing representatives reporting to one of four team leaders: Flinn, Diamond Executive Director of Purchasing Tom Stormonth, and Brand Managers Mark Herr and Denise Harrell. Flinn, who will report directly to Schanes, will oversee the day-to-day operations of the Madison, Wis., facility, as well as Previews' new international section.

Diamond Vice President of Purchasing Bill Schanes said, "This new structure — which encourages greater teamwork and, consequently, greater efficiency — offers tremendous possibilities for our department. It will enable us to expand the scope of our continuing search for new products. With each person carrying an average of almost 10 years' experience in the comic-book specialty market, we are very fortunate that [former Capital employees] have agreed to play significant roles in our new structure."

Other members of Capital City's staff who are slated to join Diamond include Mark Bergman (videos and books), James Eisele (comics), Jon Leitheusser (games), and Dennis Viau Jr. (imports). All will work out of Diamond's Madison facility and report to their team leaders at Diamond's Baltimore home office.

Schanes said, "This is a very important step in the evolution of Diamond. We can now offer our suppliers more flexibility in coordinating special promotions and marketing services and negotiate better deals for our retailers. That's because these additions have enabled us to assemble 14 of the industry's finest buyers under one roof."

Cartoon Art Museum to receive donations from Adler & Co.

As part of its grand opening celebration in November, Adler & Co. Fine Art and Animation will present what it described as "a sizable donation" to San Francisco's Cartoon Art Museum, 814 Mission St. A portion of all proceeds from the evening will be given to the museum Nov. 23.

The Adler opening began Nov. 6 and will run through December. Admission is open to the public.

In addition to a monetary contribution to the Museum, Adler & Co. will donate original storyboards from The Pink Panther to its permanent collection. The storyboards from DePatie-Freleng were used to pitch the idea of launching a cartoon series based on the character.

Since moving from New Jersey to 2284 Union St. in San Francisco seven months ago, Adler & Co. has become involved with The Ronald McDonald House at Stanford and Kristi Yamaguchi's "Always Dream" Children's Fund, benefiting the Greater Bay Area Make-a-Wish Foundation, The Japanese American Children's Arts and Cultural Fund, and the Rubicon Center.

Art on exhibit and for sale at the Adler & Co. gallery includes:

• An original watercolor painting of Mickey Mouse as The Sorcerer's Apprentice used in the production of Disney's Fantasia.

• The original story boards of The Pink Panther, mentioned above.

• Vintage and contemporary production drawings from Disney's Cinderella, Fantasia, Sleeping Beauty, Pinocchio, and other films.

• Original production cels of Fred and Wilma Flintstone, Bugs Bunny, The Lone Ranger, The Little Mermaid, Olive Oyl, Mickey Mouse, and George of the Jungle.

• A "life size" original acrylic painting, on canvas, by Deborah Dern of The Tick.

For more information from Adler call (415) 931-4471 or fax (415) 931-4612.

Comics NEWS

• The Long Halloween extends into Thanksgiving, as serial killer "Holiday" continues to stalk his criminal victims. Attempting to protect Harvey Dent from assassination, Batman runs up against Solomon Grundy in the second issue of the 12-part maxi-series. Written by Jeph Loeb and drawn by Tim Sale, the 32-page Batman: The Long Halloween is scheduled to ship Nov. 20 with a price of $2.95.

• A suburban housewife in the 1950s sets out to literally remake her life after she encounters the Time Breakers, a society of time travellers which staves off entropy by creating time paradoxes in a new mini-series from DC's Helix imprint by science-fiction writer Rachel Pollack. Time Breakers, with art by Chris Weston, is scheduled to run five issues beginning Nov. 20. The title is priced at $2.25.

• Vampirella comes to Gotham and is maneuvered into a "Bad Girl" encounter with Catwoman by the machinations of The Penguin in Catwoman / Vampirella: The Furies, a one-shot DC-Harris crossover scheduled to ship Dec. 18. The two femmes fatales follow a murderer's trail to an unexpected villain in the 48-page tale by writer Chuck Dixon and artist Jim Balent. The title is priced at $4.95.

Meanwhile, in issue #42 of her own series, also drawn by Balent, Catwoman is embroiled in a deadly catfight with an inhuman opponent called Cybercat. Scheduled to arrive in stores Dec. 26, the 32-page issue by Doug Moench is priced at $1.95.

• The Invisibles surface again, this time in the United States, in Invisibles Vol. 2 #1, scheduled to ship Dec. 26. The original series, which began in 1994, kept readers off-balance with an intentionally serpentine plotline and an art team that changed with each shift in theme. For the series' new incarnation, writer Grant Morrison has vowed to produce storylines that are more accessible to U.S. readers and to maintain the regular art team of Phil Jimenez and John Stokes. Brian Bolland will continue as cover artist. In the first story arc, "Black Science," the series moves into X-Files territory.

Gen[13] gets a second ongoing monthly series in Gen[13]: Bootleg, scheduled to make its debut in November. While the regular series is guided by Brandon Choi and co-plotter-penciller J. Scott Campbell, Bootleg will feature a series of self-contained story arcs, each by a different writer-artist team.

In the first arc, Alan Davis and Mark Farmer tell a story in which Roxy finds true love, Caitlin leads a new team, Grunge finds happiness, and Bobby and Sarah become the Adam and Eve of a future tropical paradise. The team members have become separated and lost in Lindquist's Fault, a portal to alternate realities where wishes come true, then turn ugly.

A second, three-issue story arc will be written by Terry Moore and pencilled by Tomm Coker. Series Editor Scott Dunbier said, "Gen[13]: Bootleg is one of the coolest projects I've ever worked on. I get to call creators whose work I admire and ask them if they want to get on board a really exciting comic book for a while, and, since it's not a long-term thing, pretty much everyone can manage to fit it into their schedule. It's great to see all these different interpretations of the characters — and a testament to the strength of the characters that they can hold their own."

Page One

Comic Relief #100 will feature four new Far Side cartoons and an interview with retired Far Side creator Gary Larson. Priced at $4.95, the special issue will have 100 pages and an enhanced cover.

Although the issue is not scheduled to ship until May, Page One Publishers and Bookworks has solicited it in advance, due to the increased cover price.

• Verotik goes manga with the release of Verotika East #1, scheduled to ship in January. Kaz Yamene, Koichi Ohata, Cha Cha Maru, and Hiromi Kato each contribute an erotic horror story exclusively for the first issue of this squarebound, semi-annual color series. The title is priced at $11.95 and is not intended for children.

• Japanese sculptor Susumu Sugita has designed a Venus Domina resin model kit for Verotik. The figure comes in four pieces and stands 8" tall when assembled. Supply is limited to 500 pieces and they will be sold on a first come, first served basis. The kits are scheduled to ship in January with a suggested retail price of $69.95.

Please don't take this the wrong way, but I was delighted to read of the increasing subscription difficulties in your latest editorial. ("Latest" is right. It took two weeks to get here.) Now I know I'm not the only grumbling subscriber experiencing delays.

Back when CBG was larger, it used to arrive, almost without exception, on Mondays. Lately, however, delivery has gotten progressively worse. You weren't too happy that your copy took six days to show up. Currently, for me, that's almost priority mail! Mine are averaging about 10 days each (#1191: 8, #1192: 9, #1193: 10, #1194: 10, #1194: 14!, #1196: still breathlessly awaiting its arrival).

I hope something can be done to improve matters, whether altering the paper back to an even more unwieldly size or switching from "periodical class" to something a little faster — like "pony express." Anyway, you probably should take all the griping as a compliment. If fans weren't eager for the next CBG, we wouldn't care when it arrives.

Frank Campbell

Re: your request for information concerning when CBG is delivered — here's my 2¢ worth. For the record: I received my copy of CBG #1194 (with the Dick Sprang Batman cover) on Saturday, Sept. 28. I did not receive another copy of CBG until Tuesday, Oct. 15. On that date, I received both #1195 and #1196. Today, Friday, Oct. 18, I received #1197. I went more than two weeks without any CBGs, then got three in one week. What goes on?

While I have your ear, what's happened to the free classified ads? I've taken advantage of them and have had a lot of success with them. I'm sorry to see them go

And when can we see more Mr. Silver Age? I've corresponded with Craig Shutt, and he's a nice guy. I enjoy his work and would like to see more of it.

I really enjoy CBG. You and your staff do a great job, week in and week out. Keep up the good work and I hope the distribution problems are cleared up soon.

[We think the circulation problems are just about solved. As I write this, we're analyzing the postcards and letters readers have been helpful enough to send us from around the country — and it looks as though copies are finally getting through on schedule. CBG delivery to Iola has improved at last, too.

The free classified ads have been available right along — but the forms were inadvertently omitted from some issues. I've been assured that the forms should appear regularly from now on — and you know I think they're important to our subscribers, as the industry contorts itself and settles down to its reconfiguration at the end of '97. In issue #1199, for example, the form appears on page 43. Look for the form that has the CBG logo and says "Free classified word ads."

We editorial folks have been discussing ways to increase Golden and Silver Age material in our issues, and Craig is one of our favorites, too. We hope to bring you more of his material shortly.]

After seeing so much written about the issue of signatures, I feel compelled to toss in my 2¢ worth. In response to Cliff Biggers on the value of a signature: It depends. In the same way comic books themselves are valued, the signature is worth only what someone is willing to pay for it. Just because it exists does not mean it has value. I would never pay more for a signed comic book unless it has features not available on regular editions. By "features" I mean things like a hard cover or additional unreleased material.

I do collect autographs but only at conventions or personal appearances where I actually meet the pro. This brings me to a specific response I have to William Stout's letter in CBG #1198. Sorry, but I feel you, as a pro, owe me a free autograph if I see you at a show. Notice I specified "a" — meaning one. If I am willing to part with cash for some piece of work you have done, then attend a convention (spending more money on admission, travel, etc.), and finally wait in line to tell you how much I appreciate your work, then, yes, you owe me an autograph for supporting you. This does not entitle me, however, to expect more than one signature from you. Or a free sketch. Or your personal time so that I can run off at the mouth and keep other fans from meeting you.

When I attend conventions, I take along a nice hardbound book with blank white pages inside, and this is what I use for autographs. I can't count the number of times I got to skip ahead in a line because I had only one item to sign. Then, while the pro rests his hand, he flips through my book that contains unsolicited sketches by other pros. This is the moment I get a response out of the pro, sometimes a little conversation, and usually a small sketch (without my request or expectation of such) along with their autograph. For which I am most thankful, and I express it. This has earned me many an evil stare from the speculator I was moved in front of, especially since he has so many issues to get signed for added "value." I walk away with a more valuable thing, the experience of meeting someone whose work I admire. And the pro, who was kind enough to give me a free autograph, gets a fan for life.

On another note, many thanks to Harlan Ellison. Besides being a wonderful writer,the man has superb taste in what to recommend to those of us too ignorant to know better. I have been long disgusted with science-fiction novels due to the overabundance of series and rip-off novels that never cover any new ground. So I took Ellison's advice to heart and got the re-releases of Alfred Bester's books The Stars My Destination and The Demolished Man. Wow. I was blown away. I always felt that older science fiction would be too dated in technology to be interesting in modern times.

Wrong! I finally figured out (duh!) that what was missing from the stuff on the bookshelves was the human element. Amazing what you find when you open your eyes. If anyone is holding back due to the age of these novels, don't! And, while you are at it, try rediscovering Robert Heinlein. Maggie, maybe you could entice Ellison to recommend more quality novels on a monthly basis?

For holiday gift giving, I would like to recommend:

❄ Books. Besides the authors mentioned above, add my two favorites, Andrew Vachss and Joe R. Lansdale.

❄ Gift certificates, either for a bookstore or the local comics shop.

❄ The Dark Knight Returns. Some of the best dialogue ever.

❄ Free Internet access. What can I say about the fun available on the net? (Thanks, Digimag!)

❄ Computer upgrades. I just got a new one, and, boy, had I been behind.

For me: 1) More time to complete my projects and, therefore, enjoy life. 2) Gift certificates to Books-a-Million and Gulf Coast Comics. 3) A trip to the San Diego Comic-Con, 1997. 4) More column space for Mark Evanier and Peter David. 5) A collection of Evanier's anecdotes, including those he did in Crossfire.

In response to Paula M. Borkowski, whose letter appeared in CBG #1183, you are not the only one who has missed episodes of Babylon 5.

Channel 29, the local station that was airing Babylon 5, no longer has the rights to this show, Hercules, Xena The Warrior Princess, or Kung-Fu: The Legend Continues. However, because we live in an area that is geographically close to Canada, we can catch Babylon 5 every Saturday afternoon at 5 p.m. on CTV channel 9. It has been airing in that time slot since late January, with only one or two preemptions for sporting events during that time.

In case you were wondering, the last original episode aired by channel 9 was the conclusion to the two-part "Never Ending War" espisode, which is a sequel to the "Babylon Squared" episode from the first season. This episode is a major turning point in the series, since the viewers learn the ultimate fate of Commander Sinclair, and believe me, if you haven't watched it, look for the rerun, because it will shock you.

As far as I know, this will be the last original episode to air until October, meaning that you have all summer to catch up on what you missed of the third season's episodes — or, at least, some of them.

As for the future, well, now that channel 49 is once again becoming a commercial station, there is the possibility that Babylon 5 might reappear on a Buffalo channel in the near future.

For fans of the series Nowhere Man, which has also been bounced around by channel 29, you can catch it every Friday night at midnight, also on channel 9. That's how I've been able to follow the series, which airs opposite Babylon 5 on Saturdays, and not miss an episode. Oh, yes, channel 9 manages to air all their episodes a week in advance of their showings in the United States. When channel 29 was showing Babylon 5, the episode they were showing usually aired a week earlier on channel 9. Any fan who missed an episode of Babylon 5 over the course of the past three years will have the opportunity to catch up this fall. According to an article in a science-fiction fan magazine in which the creator/producer of Babylon 5 was interviewed earlier this year, the cable channel TNT will be rerunning the series this September, starting with the pilot movie. So, Paula, take heart, your wish has just come true; you can now watch every episode from the pilot movie through the last episode of the third season in succession on cable; you're just going to have to be patient and wait a few more months, that's all.

As far as Babylon 5 merchandise is concerned, six novels based on the series have been written and are still available at local bookstores. If the bookstore you normally visit has none on its shelves, rest assured it can order the books for you.

Several friends of mine who are also fans of Babylon 5, have told me that the local Toys 'R' Us stores have had Micro Machine editions of the spaceships from the series. According to them, there are three sets available, but one set in particular is hard to find; it's the one with the Minbari Cruiser.

Oh, So?

roes of all time seems a risky move, at best.

I realize this worked for DC 10 years ago, but Marvel's situation is different. The DC universe of 1985 was in desperate need of restructuring. DC had never had the tight continuity that was Marvel's greatest asset. From the beginning, the Marvel universe was one big ongoing story. It evolved into a familiar, comfortable world, where the readers felt personally involved. The Marvel universe was like a giant family, and we were all a part of it.

So why scrap it all and produce an inferior product under the same name? Think about New Coke. "But wait!" you say, "New Coke was one of the greatest business failures of all time!" But was it? New Coke was awful, for sure, and not well received by the public. Coca-Cola was deluged with calls and letters of protest. The masses angrily demanded that old Coke be brought back immediately.

Coca-Cola, of course, complied, bringing back the real Coke under the name "Coca-Cola Classic." The masses were satisfied and returned to happily guzzling down Coca-Cola Classic.

"OK," you may say "so how was New Coke not a failure? Everyone hated it, right?" Let's look at it this way → I don't have the numbers, but I'll bet that Coca-Cola sold at least twice as much Coca-Cola Classic after New Coke. People who might have been indifferent to it before were buying it by the case. The public didn't realize how much they wanted it until they couldn't get it (for a while).

When you look at it in this light, Heroes Reborn makes sense. Even if the project is a complete failure, Marvel can then bring back the old product as "Fantastic Four Classic" (or some equivalent) and is likely to sell twice as many copies as before the "new direction" began.

Just thought I'd share this bit of logic and an excerpt from a letter I came across by Dean Mullaney that was published way back in Defenders #23. (Marvel, take note.)

"The great thing about Marvel and the Marvel universe is that it is one gigantic story. Every character has a past and, as with any truly great characters, their past must have some bearing on their present and future lives. This is the major distinction between Marvel and the competition, namely that each character is complete, not merely a cardboard figure only going through the motions of the present. They have backgrounds and depth."

"The Script Fairy did not magically wave her wand..."

Maggie Thompson

Maybe she should have.

Rather, there should be a Script Fairy waving her wand, helping comic-book writers.

Companies making millions upon millions of dollars a year should have programs that help usher in new waves of writers, illustrators, inkers, colorists, editors, janitors, etc. and teach these young artists how to make it in the big world of professional comic books.

Because if nothing changes, someday comic-book companies will run out of talent, for, one day, the new talent that today is breaking their backs trying to break into "the club" will get tired of the runaround and they will take their talents elsewhere, and these elsewhere places will prosper greatly from this talent, and comics will suffer a great loss. But I guess when we live in a world where individuals earn billions of dollars a year while families starve in the streets, asking for that kind of program is asking for too much. Writers, illustrators, inkers, colorists, editors, janitors, etc., who are blessed enough to work in an industry that they love should help aspiring artists break into the industry. They should help these young students become the professionals of tomorrow who will take the gauntlet when the teachers move on. The students are only too eager to learn. The students are only too eager to make a living doing what they love (because we, too, are busting our butts, not only learning the comic-book business, but also commuting to work. Fast food, factories, casinos: I'm pretty sure that if you poll these places you'll find an aspiring comic-book artist there.) But I guess in a world where two men spend millions of dollars to get a job that pays thousands, asking for this is too much.

Please understand that I do understand that it does happen. If you have the talent, you will be found. It will happen. But what I'm saying is that it shouldn't be so darned difficult.

What do I wish for you to take with you, Grasshopper? When you use the ladder of success to get to the top, don't pull it up after you get there and knock everybody off — instead, give them a hand up.

If I may paraphrase Oh God!:

Jerry: "But we need help!"

God: "That's why I gave you each other."

P.S. I'm sure many of you are asking yourself two questions right now: (1) Isn't Seinfeld on? and (2) Why is this kid killing his career here saying all this stuff? Again paraphrasing a great film, Braveheart: "Every comic-book writer dies — not every comic-book writer dies — not every comic-book writer really lives."

I would like to comment on the letter from Brian Michael Bendis in CBG #1194. I agree with him about not publicly airing one's grievances; whenever possible (in a public forum, at least), I try to focus more on the positive (especially when it comes to my fellow creatives). I also know that Maggie does not need a salad-head like me to defend her.

However, after reading the vitriol spewed at Maggie from someone who should be grateful to her for even mentioning his work in her column. I must open my ever-growing mouth and speak up. I do not know Bendis nor am I familiar with his work. But he's obviously much more famous and critically acclaimed than I, and, therefore, I must assume, more talented. But I do know Maggie Thompson well enough to know that she does not deserve such treatment.

Since he mentioned flipping through back issues of CBG, I would like to ask Bendis to also look at Maggie's past installments of Comics Guide. How many comics do you see reviewed in each column? Three? Four? Heck, sometimes I've seen as few as one or two! Even if we assume an average of four per column, that equals only 16 comics reviewed per month. Now take a look at an average issue of Previews. How many different comics are solicited each month? I don't have the time to count 'em, but I'll take a conservative guess and say 500. That's 16 comics reviewed out of 500. Granted, not everyone sends their comics to CBG for review, so let's say Maggie is given (and/or receives from other editors or purchases for herself) even half that amount (and I'm sure that's being very conservative). That means that out of 250 comic books every month, Maggie only has the time and space to review 16 of them. For all you stat lovers out there, that's a paltry 6.4%. I don't know about Bendis, but I'd feel pretty dang lucky to have my work appear in Comics Guide.

Oh, So?

Add to this the fact that Maggie only reviews the comics she likes. She may have a (constructive) criticism or two, but, overall, whatever's in Comics Guide is recommended reading. (Think about it: Have you ever seen Maggie completely trash a title and tell readers to steer clear of it? I haven't.) And in case anybody thinks I can't understand what it's like because it didn't happen to me, guess what? It did happen to me! In the very same issue of CBG, my comic book, Nasti: Monster Hunter, appears in Comics Guide, also with some criticism. But I was ecstatic when I saw my review.

Why? As I said, only a small handful of comics make it in (and I didn't even send a preview copy to Maggie — I was going to wait until the finished comic book was out — I only sent copies to Mike Dean for the Publishers' Picks section); second, Maggie liked it, saying she laughed several times (I hope in all the right places). Y'know what I appreciated even more? The criticism.

It was honest. It was constructive. And you know what? Maggie was correct. Yes, the inking in the Ashcan Preview could've been better: I was in a huge hurry to get it done in time for San Diego, and I've always been more of a penciller than inker. But, unfortunately, the financial non-rewards of self-publishing do not currently afford me the luxury of hiring an inker. (True, it would save time, but so far the monetary burden outweighs the chronological savings.) So, rather than rant vituperatively that Maggie didn't see things my way, I listened. I also listened to what the retailers had to say in their reviews in the Picks section. And I took their comments to heart.

When you see the finished version of Nasti, you should notice an improvement. I spent more time on the inks and I used a pen instead of a brush, which allowed me greater control with no decrease in speed. And, of course, the more I do it, the better it will look.

But the point is that I wouldn't have really thought about changing my approach if I hadn't read those comments — with an open mind and a thick skin. No artist (nor writer, musician, etc.) can improve without those two important qualities — and every artist can always improve his or her work. No, it isn't always easy to apply these virtues (I'd say that my mind was a steel trap rusted shut throughout most of art school), but it can only help your work if you listen to every comment. You don't have to heed them all, but you should know the difference between criticism for the sake of criticism and genuine suggestions for improvement. And the latter is what Maggie has always tried to offer in Comics Guide. For that we should thank her — whether you agree with her or not.

Thank you, Maggie.

And thank you to all the retailers who took the time to comment on my comic book.

I'm glad I listened.

[Thank you.

I should note a couple of things here, by the way: The first is that Bendis has been consistently cordial with me in phone calls and (yes) in the cover letter on the letter we printed. (And we have a Bendis cover feature slated for a spring issue.)

The second is that, despite Mike's kind words and Bendis' letter, Comics Guide does not consist of criticism — but of reviews*. That is to say: I try to tell the reader whether he or she might want to consider purchasing the item in question. I usually deliberately avoid making suggestions for improvement, though some such comments can be inferred.*

Oh, and I always intend to run at least occasional negative reviews. But, since I'm ordinarily cramped for space, I'm reluctant to devote much to material about which I haven't much positive to say. Don used to joke that people wanted me to write the reviews because they thought I'd be kinder. "Little do they know," he said, "how much nastier you are about some of this material." And he was right. But, since I don't get space to cover all the things I do like, you probably won't see that side of me soon.]

Michael Pickens

First, I just read somewhere that Space Cases, Bill Mumy and Peter David's SF program, is the highest-rated Nickelodeon live-action show in that network's history. Shouldn't that get some publicity or something?

Now, why comics writing is so sucky: two amusing anecdotes. Number One, I had and have given up on breaking into comics (yes, I'll cover that later), but a while back an editor infuriated me by insisting that any and all aspiring comics writers had to move to New York; he wouldn't read blind submissions. I found this particularly offensive because a friend of mine who'd done something similar, going to California to try to break into movies, ended up committing suicide when his money ran out and he had to come back home.

Moreover, it really is quite beyond most folks' powers. I, at the time, was making just over $500 a month, paying rent, paying bills, trying to pay off a car that was falling apart on me — and my job, which requires me to work weekends and holidays, does not offer paid vacations. I simply didn't have the money or the time to even go to conventions, let alone make pilgrimages to editorial offices. The editor dismissed all of this as irrelevant. If I truly wanted to get into comics, he explained serenely with the smug obliviousness of a guy who had graduated from business school, borrowed money from Daddy, gone to the big city, found an entry-level job, worked his way into middle management, and now considered himself a Horatio Alger hero, I would figure out some way to manage it. It wasn't until some time later I realized that was a dodge; he just wasn't interested in reading submissions.

Anecdote Number Two concerns a friend of mine who had had a little more luck. She'd sent out a batch of lettering samples, and someone at Marvel had responded to her submission. The commentator had told her that her work "showed promise," certainly nice to know considering she'd been working professionally as a letterer for nearly five years. The company wouldn't hire her for actual lettering work but did offer her an office job doing corrections and that kind of thing. She turned the company down, not out of ego or anger, but simple economic and practical reasoning. She was working as a letterer elsewhere. That's what she wanted to do. If she'd wanted to do office work, there was plenty of opportunity right where she was.

The main point in these stories is the mainstream publishers' sense of self-importance. They really, honestly believe themselves to be so incredibly wonderful, so absolutely magnificent, that people should be willing to do anything to work for them. The reality's quite different.

Folks, from a beginning writer's standpoint, mainstream comics are a pretty lousy gig. I don't say that to be mean; I'm just stating facts. The pay's generally lousy, there's very little creative freedom, you have to work like a dog just to break even, and the best you can really hope for is to become a fad and/or icon to a very limited audience.

Granted, you also get to work with characters and in a medium you may have loved since childhood, but that's only going to take you so far. At best, it's a fantastic day job, something to pay the bills while you work on your novel. Who wants to go through hell just to write comic books for a living? If they're going to be that obnoxious about it, you might as well stay home and sell shoes or work at Taco Bell. If comics editors demand people who can imagine nothing more wonderful than writing Spider-Man for a living, they're going to end up with people who can imagine nothing more wonderful than writing Spider-Man for a living. That and people who happened to be in the offices anyway.

Established writers have a somewhat better time at it. The comics field has had some luck with moderately successful science-fiction writers who take on comics work to pay bills and out of fondness for the medium. But, again, it's a day job, not their life's dream. If you're going to fail as a writer, there are many, many cheaper and more fulfilling ways of going about it than trying to break into comics. That's why I quit. Sorry.

[If your life's dream was to be a zoo veterinarian, you would: (a) take years of in-school training followed by years of veterinary practice, (b) relocate to a city which had a zoo, and probably (c) join the vet staff as a trainee. You would not: (a) announce you were ready to be a veterinarian, (b) continue to live in a village which had no zoo, and (c) expect to begin treating cobras for fang infections.

Part of the job of writing for comics professionally (or of doing any job for which you expect an employer to pay you a living wage) is accommodating the needs of the employer. The needs of most comics employers include an in-house support staff — which is where most beginners' writing opportunities are likely to be.

Moreover, the comics field is in a state of retrenchment now — and many, many writers and artists of many, many years' experience have simply had to find salaried work in other fields — meaning that publishers looking for writers and artists have a broad talent pool to fish in. And that's the reality. Your lettering friend was offered work at a time in which more and more publishers are using computer lettering. She chose not to take the work that was available, and that was her decision; it sounds as though she was considerately treated by someone trying to make a place for her at the company where she had said she wanted to work.

My daughter's best friend is brilliant and an excellent actress. She had hoped to break into the world of New York City theaters. It didn't happen (though I was fortunate enough to see her in a touring dual-language Molière production) — and she ended up as a terrific NYC white-collar worker, much to the good fortune of the company that employs her. For that matter, my daughter decided New York would be where she wanted to work and spent scary times barely making ends meet while working such jobs as selling Chipwiches from a cart on Wall Street. She eventually applied for a job stuffing envelopes for Sculpture Review magazine, it turned into an associate editor's job — and that eventually led to her current job with Ruder-Finn Design.

What I'm trying to say is that a company will want to hire you to do what that company needs to have done. If it coincides with your dream, that's keen. And the day job of Valerie's boss at Ruder-Finn is creative director — but he's also written off-Broadway shows which have received rave reviews. That didn't mean he walked into work the next day to quit. He kept his day job, because that's the reality of some types of creative work. I don't mean to criticize your friend who wanted to be in films, but I would suggest that no one — no one — should select suicide as the only alternative to landing a desired job, as you're obviously aware.

So congratulations for realizing that comic-book writing was not worth the risks and effort it would require for you. I hope you find a job that repays the risks you take and effort you make.

JJM: Numbers for the record: It's my estimate that there are about 12,000 full-time jobs in the comics industry — and that includes retailing — down from about 15,000 last year and from 25-30,000 during the industry's peak in 1993. I would doubt that even half of those who've lost full-time work in the past three years have chosen to leave the industry entirely — and many of those still in full-time positions are doing their best to see that their experienced former co-workers get part-time assignments and their talent is not lost to the field.*

The reality on the streets in 1996 is that any new talent applying to major publishers is in competition with the largest field of experienced "insiders" with connections in industry history. So you've got to be that much better — or self-publish. Or both.

Nothing comes without sacrifice. Maggie and I both dropped everything and moved more than 600 miles to a tiny town just to work full-time in the comics industry when the opportunity arose. This is not the market for asking questions when and if the call comes.]

We're going on the road.

Personalized service.

Isn't that what most people want from their business partners? 14 years ago, Steve Geppi founded Diamond Comic Distributors on that concept. Now, we're getting back to basics — going on the road again — with our new Field Rep program.

Introducing, the Diamond Field Reps.

They can't be in every place at one time, but our Field Reps sure can cover a lot of ground. There will be 10 Field Reps stationed throughout the U.S. and Canada. Our goal is to visit most Diamond retailers at least 4 times a year. In person. At your store. People like Tim, Mike, Kirby and the others are at your service, to listen to your needs and help your store succeed.

Card-Carrying Industry Fans.

The best part about our Field Reps is their knowledge of the industry. They love comics and its related merchandise — they can help you sell more. They understand retailing—they've got good merchandising ideas to share with you. They'll be loaded with POP materials, retail posters, free samples and more. Plus, they'll have plenty of time for personalized service. Plenty of time to listen.

Diamond's Field Rep Program.
It's another "Service for your Success" coming soon to your store.

By John Jackson Miller
CBG Associate Editor

CBG readers have been sending circulation figures found in comic books all fall in response to our Great Circulation Scavenger Hunt update (CBG #1189, Aug. 30). Piles of data from 13 readers have been entered into the database, bringing the total number of different Statements of Ownership in the database to 1,880.

The database currently accounts for the disposition of just over 4 billion comic books, an increase of 1 billion since August.

The half-way point. We finally have enough data on hand to make an educated guess as to the total number of comic-book Statements of Ownership that may have been printed since 1960. By taking the 315 titles for which statements are in the database and counting every year of publication after the first as a possible candidate for published circulation figures, we would expect to find 3,933 individual Statements of Ownership. That leaves 2,053 Statements unaccounted for, and we expect there may be more in short-run titles that may have eluded us entirely. We also expect that a considerable number of these potential Statements weren't printed at all, but we need your help to confirm that.

Our specific Archie needs appear in the box at lower right. We still need data from other pubishers, so we'll run more updates.

1996: We're off! The first circulation figures have started appearing for titles' 1996 circulation. They've appeared so far in Marvel and Gladstone titles, and we expect we may see them in Archie and Big Entertainment titles, as well as in Mad, Heavy Metal, Cracked, and Comic Relief. Marvel seems to have jumped the gun in an manner unprecedented in the history of comics publishers: Its 1996 Statements began appearing in 1996 cover-dated titles shipping as early as the first week of September — and post-dated Oct. 1, 1996. So figures which would be expected to account for direct-market and newsstand sales from July 1995 to June 1996 likely only account for comics up until April 1996. Marvel's 1996 figures will henceforth be treated with an asterisk in our research.

Applications. We've received a number of good ideas from readers regarding possible uses for this data once it's compiled, and many requests for access to the entire database at that point. I am examining several formats for reporting this information, which currently requires 6 megabytes of disk space in its raw form. Full reporting in CBG does not appear realistic, considering the sheer amount of space needed for full disclosure and analysis. I am approaching this project in three phases: the first being Statement of Ownership collation, followed by the accession of 1980s and 1990s data from direct-market distributors, and finally the collection of pre-1960s data. I am hopeful that a book project may result from this work in 1997 or 1998, permitting me to share the maximum information possible.

Once again, send all data to:

Average comic-book circulation, 1960-1996

A work in progress. Based on 1,880 circulation statements from 315 comics titles available by second-class subscription since 1960, we find an all-time average circulation of 191,556 copies sold per issue. Some of the sharp peaks have softened somewhat as more statements have been found.

Statements in CBG circulation database

The statements we've got are noted by the black portion of each bar; the clear area represents statements suspected to exist for each year.

Thanks!

Special thanks to these stores and individuals who've combed their collections to provide this valuable data for us this round: Aaron Atwood, Berkeley, Calif.; Bruce Bergeron, Attleboro, Mass.; Kurt Culler, Redford, Mich.; Shad Z. Daly, Sterling, Colo.; Rob Kirby, Herts, United Kingdom; J.P. Lang, Norfolk, Va.; Tom Michael, Scandinavia, Wis.; Scott Micheel, The Comic Warehouse, Albuquerque, N.M.; Randy Phillips, Peoria, Ill.; Craig J. Sorry if we've missed mentioning anybody — but be assured we do appreciate everyone's help in this important project!

Back in the 1970s, I spent about 10 days hanging around the Marvel offices, functioning as an unpaid editorial assistant. No one hired me. I just wandered up with friends who worked there and found myself proofreading comic books and doing lettering corrections, paste-ups, and such. I even inked backgrounds for issues of Spider-Man and Ghost Rider.

"Comic books didn't have a very good reputation at that time, and I spent a lot of time trying to think of some other field I could get into."
— Stan Lee

"Stan Lee was the guy who pointed [the industry] in the right direction and gave it a shove."
— Mark Evanier

This may seem like an act of supreme gullibility — working for free for Marvel Comics — but I was having fun and I was helping my pals who were on staff and grotesquely overburdened with work. And, given what Marvel then paid, my salary wasn't that far below theirs.

By my last few days, everyone was taking me for a new employee, and I was being handed comic books to correct and copy to rewrite. One day, as I sat and rested from a rush-deadline lettering fix, Stan Lee wandered in.

He didn't recognize me — not that I'd have expected him to back then. We'd only met once, years earlier; to him, I was just a kid working in the office, except that at that moment I didn't seem to be doing any work.

I was about to say, "I'm not goofing off, Stan — I'm not on the payroll," when a look came over him that seemed to say, "I have nothing to do." That is, he — Stan Lee, publisher of Marvel Comics — had nothing to do at that precise moment. From his manner, I gathered this was a rare occurrence and he was somewhat at a loss as to how to handle it.

He spotted the original art to a comic book sitting there — an issue of a comic book that Stan had co-created and scripted for a time. As I later learned, he had not actually read the title in years and, with this unexpected hole in his afternoon, decided to give it a peek. He and the art disappeared down the hall.

About 10 minutes later, he returned with it. I gathered he had not enjoyed what he had read.

Faces more familiar than mine were back from lunch by then, and he asked one of the assistant editors to pass on some comments to the writer of the title. "Sure," the assistant said. "What do you want me to tell him?"

For the next five minutes, I eavesdropped, as Stan delivered a critique that was thoroughly nondemanding. He was the publisher of the company — the absolute head honcho. He was also the co-creator of the character, so he had both ranking and moral credentials to insist on his viewpoint being heeded. Still, he spoke in sentences that began with "Well, this is just my opinion, but — " and "I'd like the writer to consider if perhaps — "

He did not say, as others of lesser stature might, "Hey, I'm in charge here and I started this comic! You tell that pathetic excuse for a writer he's going to do it my way or I'll placekick his keister all the way to Charlton." Rather, he offered suggestions, all the time triple-underlining that he in no way wished to overrule the creative authority of the comic book's current writer.

And he perfectly pegged, I thought, what was going awry in the title. He knew clearly what the strip was — or should have been — about. Now, you say, "Of course he knew. He was its co-creator. Wouldn't he have to know what the comic book was all about?" And the answer to that is no, not necessarily. A lot of people in this world are able to create something wonderful without being able to explain, even to themselves, precisely what it is they've created.

But Stan knew, and I was impressed.

I was also impressed with how he said what he said. A creative discussion, whether in a comic-book office or a TV or movie studio, can all too often devolve into the grand national finals of assertiveness training.

Stan did not pound on a desk, turn over a table, yell, remind anyone of his credentials, remind anyone of his power to fire, threaten physical violence, or insist on having his way. I have seen others do all those things, rarely to the improvement of the material, usually to its detriment. (A very important TV producer once said to me, "If you have to raise your voice to an employee, it probably means you're the one who's not doing his job very well.")

No, Stan just gave his viewpoint, and, later that day, when the writer came in, Lee's notes were relayed to him. The scripter thought them over, said, "Stan's right," and, as I saw months later, began applying it to the work.

I was, again, impressed.

When Stan agreed to do a "spotlight" at the 1995 San Diego Comic-Con, he asked me to be its host and interviewer. I was honored to do so.

The highlight came when Stan's charming spouse, Joan, kibitzing from the front row, got him to sing the Merry Marvel Marching Society song. (They must have a very strong marriage. That's grounds for divorce in some states.)

My opening question went something like this: "Let's go back to, say, 1955. You're at a party and someone asks you what you do for a living. What do you tell them?" I was hoping Stan would say something akin to what he had said to me on the same topic over lunch a few months earlier. (He didn't. He gave a funny answer, which was fine for the moment, but not what I wanted.)

His mealtime answer to me had been, approximately, "I'd tell them I was an editor and a writer and I'd hope they didn't ask what I edited or wrote. Comic books didn't have a very good reputation at that time, and I spent a lot of time trying to think of some other field I could get into." We should all be grateful he didn't think of one.

That sentiment is, I think, key to understanding the so-called Marvel Age of Comics. In almost every interview about the birth of Marvel, Stan talks about feeling frustrated before Fantastic Four #1. From about 1956 until the early sales returns on the super-hero titles, Marvel teetered on the cusp of extinction. The job offered little in the way of creative fulfillment, less in the way of salary and security, and darn near nothing in terms of prestige. This has too often been the affliction of comics: So many other fields of endeavor seem so much more attractive.

It is better now than it once was, and a number of people deserve credit for improving the lot of the comics creator in such areas as compensation, credit, creative control, copyright, etc. But one person deserves a special nod for improving the image of the comic book.

I've used this analogy before, but it bears repeating:

The great publishing success story of the late '50s/early '60s was Playboy. Hugh Hefner did many things to make his publication a success, but a key one was that he made it kinda respectable to buy a magazine with photos of naked women. Before Hef, they were pretty grimy enterprises, and many men wouldn't be caught deceased with one. After Hef, they had a classy, well-printed magazine they could purchase and claim to have bought only for the articles.

Stan Lee made it kinda respectable to keep reading comics past a certain age. DC used to concede a 2-3 year rollover for its comics line; that is, kids would start reading DC comics at age 9 or 10, and they'd outgrow them around age 12 or 13. There was no way of keeping them past then, so there was no point in trying.

When kids reach the outset of their teens, they inevitably go through an age-identity crisis, seeking to affirm that they are no longer children. Often, this involves chucking out anything they identify with their "baby" years. (I got rid of my Disney comics and almost every toy I owned and thought I'd outgrown. Years later, secure in my adulthood, I began the expensive process of buying much of it back — and I'm not alone in this. Have you seen the prices these days on Barks comics and old toys?)

But if DC gave up on kids once they hit 12, Stan sure didn't, not in the glory days of Marvel. In the "Bullpen Bulletins" and other nuggets of PR, he touted the notion that Marvels were appealing to older audiences, that they were being read and discussed on college campuses. I'm not sure that this was true when he started saying it, but, if it wasn't, it certainly became true. Either way, a lot of kids who might have given up comics kept reading them longer.

This had a lot to do with Marvel's sales successes and even more to do with comics gaining some measure of respectability. I know very few folks today who are ashamed to say they write or draw comic books for a living — and most are darn proud of it.

Now, obviously, even if this started as mere public relations, the material had to back up the claim, had to be something that older readers could and would enjoy. The basis of Marvel's success in the 1960s was that the comics were, on the whole, pretty good and that they didn't talk down to their readers the way most others did. And, of course, readers will debate until 2099 how much of that quality was Stan and how much was Jack Kirby or Steve Ditko or many other fine creative talents.

Still, the packaging was all Stan's, and I don't think he's gotten nearly enough credit for promoting the product. Maybe he was just trying to sell more Hulk comics, or maybe he was trying to convince himself he had more adult readers than he actually had. But he defined Marvel as a place where comics didn't have to be just for kids, and the entire industry has headed that way ever since. Maybe it hasn't gone as far or as fast as some of us might've liked, but Stan Lee was the guy who pointed it in the right direction and gave it a shove.

When you put it all in the context of his career, you have to admire this. I do, anyway. He didn't get out and find a more respectable field; he stayed in comics and helped them to become a more respectable field. (He also didn't leave Marvel to get into television or movies; he stayed with Marvel and urged the company into those areas.)

I would like to be able to report that Stan and I have always gotten along, but that is not quite true. Over the years, my mentor and friend Jack Kirby had a number of problems with Marvel and —

No, let me amend that: Not with Marvel but with certain folks who worked at Marvel at different times. I don't think Jack was always treated right, nor have I ever encountered anyone with any credibility who thinks he was. Among other things, I still think it oughta say "Created by Stan Lee and Jack Kirby" on every comic book, TV show, or movie project that was created by Stan Lee and Jack Kirby.

Because of my proximity to both gents — Kirby, especially — I am frequently asked about their relationship and about reports of friction and estrangement over the years. I'm currently writing a full-length biography of Jack which will include, if not the definitive answer, then at least the best one I can offer. (Don't start looking for the book now — it's a few years off. I haven't even started looking for a publisher yet.)

So, for now, let me say that, yes, there were moments of anger and frustration there, and, as I loved Jack dearly, I shared some of those moments. I'd like to take this opportunity to publicly apologize to Stan if, as I'm sure I did, I took some of that anger and frustration out on him.

He is well aware of those moments, I'm sure. And yet, last year when the TV show Biography did an hour on his life and times, he suggested me as someone who should be interviewed for the program. I thought that was a classy move by a classy guy.

(Let me explain why: Stan knows I think Kirby did not get his due from Marvel on many levels, in many ways. He also knows I can be emotional on the subject. There was very little chance I would have despoiled his tribute with angry words or an overstatement of Kirby's role — but some people would not have taken even that teensy chance. There are plenty of folks he could have nominated to go on and talk about Marvel history — but Stan suggested me because, I assume, he wanted to make sure that Jack's role would be properly represented. As I said — classy.)

Stan Lee has had a very long career — one that shows no signs of diminishing in the years to come. At an age when other men look to retirement, he is as active as he's ever been.

How has he managed this? I believe it has something to do with that management style we've discussed: with his refusal to impose his views on his employees. He does his job, he allows others around him to do theirs — and the result is that he and most of those around him do their best work.

But that doesn't completely explain Stan Lee.

I think it has something to do his sense of timing, with his instincts, discussed a moment ago, about how comics had to change in the 1960s.

But that also doesn't completely explain Stan Lee.

And I think it has a lot to do with his sense of style (discussed last week), his ability to connect with his readers (discussed the week before), and his enthusiasm for other creative talents (discussed the week before that).

But none of that completely explains Stan Lee.

What I'm getting at, True Believers, is that I've dragged you through four weeks of columns about Stan Lee and I have no easy explanation for his success, his longevity, or his ascension to superstardom. I wish I did.

I know how Bruce Banner became the Hulk. I know how Matt Murdock became Daredevil. I know how Don Blake became Thor. I know how Peter Parker became Spider-Man. I even know how Henry Pym became Ant-Man, who in turn became Giant-Man, who then became Goliath, who then turned into Yellowjacket and then went back to being Ant-Man and then became — OK, so maybe I don't know that one.

But I also don't know how Stanley Lieber became Stan Lee, known and loved by a generation or two of Marvelites. And I have a hunch that he doesn't know, either, which is one of the most charming things about him.

Somewhere, though, the secret exists — and, if we all put our noggins together and work real hard, maybe — just maybe — we can find it.

Personally, I'm guessing gamma rays.

This column has been brought to you by Mark Evanier, 363 S. Fairfax Ave., #303, Los Angeles, CA 90036. 'Nuff said.

Georges Pichard
"It is an essential tenet of Christian morality that sin must be expiated through penitence. All that was touched by sin must be purified through penitence. Following this principle, the body contributed to sin and so therefore must be punished. The body is sin's instrument and organ and so must it be its victim and its object." From a quote in this best-selling classic of bondage. Buyer beware: this is very hardcore B&D. Adults only.
9x12, 136pp., B&W, color cover, trade pb.: $15.95

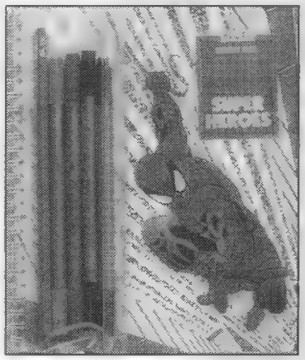
WHAT COMICS ARE COMING TO

By Maggie Thompson

• I first came across Draw the Marvel Comics Super Heroes (subtitled "A Mighty Manual of Step-by-Step Instruction") in a bookstore a couple of months ago and have been meaning to rave about what I saw when I glanced through it. Now the folks at publisher Klutz Press (2121 Staunton Court, Palo Alto, CA 94306, if you can't locate a copy at your local bookstore or comics shop) have sent a copy (1996, $12.95, ISBN 1-57054-000-4) — so I could take a longer look. I first came across Klutz books years ago: The company publishes how-to books in combination with activity items. For example, beanbags comes with a juggling book; a harmonica is packaged with an instruction manual; and a book on string games is accompanied by string. In this case, there are bound-in blank pages and sturdy tracing paper — plus a plastic-zipped pouch with four felt-tip pens (each end tipped, one with broad point, one with fine) and a pencil with an eraser. The nine pages of tracing vellum lie over full-color art, to help the beginner. And the book is packed with art tips. Some pages suggest they are for studying, not drawing; others ask the student to fill the page with art. The exercises vary; one, for example, asks the artist to take a step back, constructing a stick-figure rough from a pre-pencilled figure. The drawings are by Richard Becker and John Romita; the lettering is comic-book style; Becker also gets a "development" credit — which, I assume, gets him the gold star for writing and compiling this delightful — perhaps inspirational — publication. You'll find such tips as the following: "Just like the pros, you're not going to like most of the stick figures you draw ... so erase them! They take 30 seconds! Draw new ones!!" and "Remember! Don't draw tiny! Don't draw dark! And don't draw big heads!"



I wish I'd had this when I was learning to draw. It combines fun with a solid introduction to some of the facets of action-filled representational art. (If it does well, maybe we could see a sequel dealing with do-it-yourself pictorial story-telling?) This would be a great treat under the tree this year for a lot of kids.

• Take this discussion with the following caveat: I have never been particularly fond of The Legion of Super-Heroes. This is not to say that I have never found occasional bright spots — but I am not a LOSH buff. If you are, I suppose you might have a different opinion of Legionnaires #43 (Dec 96, DC, $2.25). I wouldn't know. But.

Co-plotters Roger Stern and Tom McCraw, scripter Stern, penciller Jeffrey Moy, and inkers W.C. Carani and Philip Moy put together a delightful story in "New Blood." The story has been done in the past — the Legion holds tryouts for membership — but it makes for inventive fun. And inventive fun is what the team has come up with this time. There are details that will please long-time buffs who hunt for them; there is also a simple beginning, middle, and end story for those who want to ignore the fancy stuff. The issue also establishes the basics for new readers, as the story progresses. I read a lot of gripes from long-time readers who want today's comics to tell new stories with old values and traditions. Legionnaires is one of the titles those readers should be checking out.

• A copy of Hake's Price Guide to Character Toy Premiums (Oct 1996, Gemstone, $24.95 softcover) just came in, and I am awash in nostalgia. Bob Overstreet had a lot to do with production of this volume, which was written by Ted Hake — and the design, the wealth of pictures, and the "pop culture" topics are terrific. It seems the $2 each I paid for those Straight Arrow cards was right on the money. (By the way, though, I've said before about the Vic and Sade map that even I would pay $100 for one: I have to figure it's underpriced here. And, last I heard, only one copy was known to exist. End of quibble.)

Not every character toy premium ever released is here, of course — but, in looking through the book, you'll find yourself sucked into quests for items that are special to you. This is a trip down memory lane and a helpful guide to the collector. Oh, yes, and it has more than 100 pages in color. Take a look. I'll bet you won't put it down before you've checked on at least a dozen topics. And there are dozens of dozens here.

Bru-Hed and a bad babe:

Schism Comics' future features a fighting female and further foul-ups of a funny fellow

The cover art for Nasti #1

The cover of Bru-Hed #1

It's only Page 4 of Nasti: Monster Hunter #1, and Nasti's already having monster trouble.

by Jim Johnson

She's a courageous warrior enlisted by forces from beyond our dimension to fight the monsters and demons who prey upon our world. She's a "Bad Girl" with brains and a woman with character whose merits go beyond her physical beauty. She's Nasti, Monster Hunter.

He, on the other hand, is rude, crude, and likes his brew. He's an obnoxious beer-guzzler who wears polka-dotted boxer shorts and has a king-size cranium with a protruding pot belly to match. He's Bru-Hed, America's Favorite Blockhead.

No, they aren't the world's definitive odd couple. Nasti, Monster Hunter, is the newest creation of Mike Pascale and the star of a new title due in November from Pascale's Schism Comics. Bru-Hed is Pascale's first creation and star of his own comedy comic book, whose first mini-series concluded earlier this year. Both titles are written and drawn by Pascale.

Explaining the concept of Nasti, Pascale said, "She's a dimensional warrior whose mission is to hunt monsters. I'm referring to the three primary realms: the realms of Light, Darkness, and the physical world of man. Nasti has been appointed by the Light Realm to seek out and destroy demonic citizens from the Dark Realm that cross into our world: werewolves, vampires, zombies, child molesters, rapists, serial killers, or corporate heads of large comics companies.

"The basis of the strip, and the character's powers and background, is rooted in both the metaphysical and physical. She has a physical-metaphysical connection to a tabloid writer-reporter named Angela Nastibetti, the specifics of which will be revealed later. The plot is that someone from the Dark Realm is turning powerful corporate figures into monsters, and it's up to Nasti to figure it out and put an end to it before the monsters put an end to her."

Pascale said he is striving to make Nasti unlike any other "Bad Girl" comic book. "Although the protagonist is an obligatory sexily clad, strong-yet-beautiful female, I'm mixing in horror, fantasy, romance, comedy, adventure, mystery, philosophy, and even autobiography. After all, that's life, right? I might as well put in everything — at least everything I like to read. Just as popular 'genre' films are often combinations of several styles, I want Nasti to be a blend of many different genres.

"Much of the series will focus on a triangle between Angela, Nasti, and another tabloid employee named David Frank. Dave is a would-be comedian who is infatuated with Angela but who lacks the self-confidence, self-esteem, and social skills to really do anything about it. When Nasti comes into his life, he's enthralled and doesn't know what to do. Angela thinks Dave is great but thinks of nice guys as 'just friends.' "

The title will have 32 pages with black-and-white interiors and color covers, priced at $2.50. It will be a limited series, but Pascale did not commit to a specific number of issues. "It will be as long as it takes to tell the story," he said.

Why did Pascale move into a different genre? "Basically, I wanted a comic book that would sell," he said. "Sorry, no corporate hype here. I don't do comics for a living, not yet, anyway, so I can publish what I enjoy. But I want to do comics for a living and I have to build my customer base and do a comic book that will pay for itself. The catch is to do something I enjoy that will be worth my time and effort. So I'll hopefully end up with a comic book that I would like to read and that people would like to buy. And that's the truth."

The very first Nasti story actually appeared as a back-up feature last year in Bru-Hed's Breathtaking Beauties, a one-shot pin-up gallery and Schism's best-selling single issue to date.

So who is this Bru-Hed? "Bru-Hed's a stereotypical American guy," Pascale said. "He's someone we know: a co-worker, a buddy, a boyfriend, husband, family member, or the obnoxious beer drinker sitting behind you at a sporting event. Except his head is nearly twice the size of his body.

"His idea of the perfect existence is watching TV, drinking beer, eating junk food, drinking beer, ogling women, drinking beer, and playing cards, but only while drinking beer. Bru-Hed doesn't drink to get drunk. He can't. He drinks for the taste and the sustenance of his life-affirming brew.

"The only problem is that life won't let him do what he wants. He's constantly interrupted and harangued by nosy neighbors, Jehosephat's Witnesses, angry feminists, charity seekers, and Grrim and Grritty super-assassins who trash his home and try to kill him. Because of Bru-Hed's political incorrectness, he gets into plenty of trouble, but he's not prejudiced. He hates everybody."

The most recent Bru-Head project is an eight-page illustrated prose story in the anthology Strange Kaddish: Tales You Won't Hear from Bubbie, edited by Clifford Meth and recently released by Aardwolf Publishing. The book is a collection of Jewish fiction.

Pascale said, "Obviously, not all the contributors are Jewish, which makes for interesting perspectives. The stories run from science fiction to drama to low-brow comedy, but are accessible to gentiles." The book features stories by Meth, Harlan Ellison, and Neil Gaiman, among others, and art by Gray Morrow, Dave Cockrum, Paty, and Bill Messner-Loebs. "I wrote the story in a harried state of deadline panic at San Diego. So fans should please be kind."

Although Pascale will focus exclusively on Nasti in the coming months, he does have plans for additional Bru-Hed projects, including Bru-Hed's Bachelor Party; Bru-Hed's Bunnies, Buddies, and Baddies Easter Parade; and Bru-Hed's Guide to Gettin' Girls Now!

Bru-Hed has also entered the world of multimedia. When San Jose-based software manufacturer Human Computing releases its next version of ComicBase in December, it will feature the Bru-Hed theme song, composed and performed by Pascale. ComicBase is a tracking and database program for comics collectors.

Although Pascale created the character nearly 10 years ago, Bru-Hed didn't see print until 1993, as a limited-edition ashcan, released prior to the four-issue mini-series. The ashcan was favorably reviewed by Don Thompson in CBG, and the edition eventually sold out, prompting him to continue publishing.

Pascale procured the talents of Dean Armstrong to produce computer-airbrushed paintings for each issue's cover. Armstrong has also done covers for Kitchen Sink's Death Rattle and Grateful Dead Comix and will illustrate covers for Nasti. "Dean was the first independent artist to fully digitally airbrush his artwork on a computer," Pascale said, "as opposed to computer-generated comics or computer-colored black-and-white linework. I give him a pencil sketch which he scans into his computer and paints with a painting program. It's exactly like airbrushing but it's faster, cleaner, and safer for the lungs. He's one of the best artists I've ever seen; his knowledge of anatomy, form, and color are unsurpassed."

Pascale himself is not new to the comics field; he has been self-publishing intermittently for more than 20 years. "I began publishing in 1975, first by myself and then with Kenneth Jones, who is now the writer and co-publisher of Doris, Atomic Housewife. My dad would photocopy the comics at his office and I would sell them at school and at local conventions here in Detroit for 10¢ or 15¢. Of course, this was more than 15 years before I knew there was a small press. We'd usually sell out our print run, usually 50 copies.

"In 1981, I attended the Joe Kubert School with Jay Geldhof, Graham Nolan, Eric Shanower, and Jim Balent. Adam and Andy Kubert also were there. It was one talented group of students. Except me, of course. Then I decided to major in advertising, since the comics profession was in worse shape than it is now. I went to the Center for Creative Studies in Detroit, where I received a BFA in art direction."

How does Pascale feel about his chances in today's market? "With all the turmoil plaguing the industry, as well as the copycat junk flooding the market, I understand retailers' and readers' reluctance to try new things. I just ask that they give me and Nasti a fair shot. There will be two to three months between Nasti #1 and #2, so retailers can gauge sales. I promise it will be entertaining, if not enlightening. In other words: Isn't it about time you got a meal with your cheesecake?"

Bru-Hed's Breathtaking Beauties and all four issues of Bru-Hed are available for $2.50 each at comics shops and are distributed by Diamond, Cold Cut, Big Picture, and Draculina Direct. Schism Comics is a participant in the 40 & 5 program. Or write to: Schism Comics, 19785 W. Twelve Mile Rd., Suite #190, Southfield, MI 48076.

BARRY WINDSOR-SMITH TELLS STORIES ABOUT BARRY WINDSOR-SMITH STORYTELLER

"Nobody's going to stop me."

Barry Windsor-Smith doesn't usually work on such a large canvas, but had to when he was working on "the world's largest comics panel" for X-O Manowar #10 a few years ago.

By Bruce Costa

As was perhaps the case with you, I first became aware of Barry Windsor-Smith's work (then just Barry Smith) on the early issues of Marvel's Conan the Barbarian. As riveted as I was by a debut that drove Conan to become the X-Men of its day, I remained continually impressed as Smith's fine work grew even stronger over subsequent decades. Imagine my delight when I was asked to interview him on behalf of Dark Horse Comics for what he calls his "main event." Not only did I find him to be intelligent, charming, of good humor, and otherwise everything I might hope to find in an idol, but I found his enthusiasm for this new project infectious. I easily became enthralled with Storyteller; it only remained to be seen if the larger comics-reading audience would, as well.

It seems that the votes are in. Via CompuServe's Comics and Animation Forum, F.X. Moon of Southbury, Conn., wrote:

To those of you looking for a reason to justify reading comics again, now that Kingdom Come is come and gone, I highly recommend you pick up Storyteller by Barry Windsor-Smith. With so many current comics seeming to be little more than exercises in drawing cleavage, it is an absolute pleasure to find a book like Storyteller. The art and writing is absolutely incredible — LOL [Laughing Out Loud] too many times to recount. I cannot think of a better way to spend five bucks, whether you're a BWS fan or not. If you're not, pick up this book, and you will be.

Role-playing game artist Ken Meyer Jr. added:

He held so many 'positions' on the comic book — writer, penciller, inker, and colorist in some cases, and overseeing the whole thing — I eagerly awaited it and I wasn't disappointed. The art, of course, is head and shoulders above most of what's out there; that incredibly beautiful Windsor-Smith line work is still there. I was amazed, actually, that he had done so much (and will, frankly, be surprised if he can keep it up).

Timeliness and sustainability is a concern about this project frequently voiced by fans when, having seen the first issue replete with highly detailed art, they get an inkling of the tremendous effort that must be involved. Yet one of the astonishing things about this series is how far ahead of schedule the Windsor-Smith Studio has driven its work.

"I suppose it's unusual for people to be working on issue #7 when issue one has just been published," said Diana Schutz, acting as Dark Horse's editorial liaison to the Windsor-Smith Studio, "but, in fact, Barry insisted on having six issues 'in the can' before the first was published. That way we'll be sure we'll meet the monthly deadline — God willing and the creek don't rise."

Still, it's not as though the intent is to turn out a sketchbook of rough pencils. I tried to express to Windsor-Smith himself that the thought of the discipline necessary to apply such detail to such a volume of work over such a long period of time with no feedback at all seemed staggering to me.

"I've just been doing it for so long," he said. "I've had deadlines loom a hundred times. But I've very rarely missed a deadline in more than a quarter century. The size of this book, the importance of this book, everything about this book really demanded that we be as far ahead as we possibly can be before we put it out to the public.

"These books get more complex as they go along, as the stories become more complex, as I understand more about my own characters. The first issue was a real test of fire, especially with its eight bonus pages (which we should have cover-blurbed). The second issue, which will be reduced in size to 32 pages, is going to be just as much of a test. We're not going to be able to get easy about this. It's a tough job to be able to pull off something of this kind of quality every month."

The project is being taken just as seriously 3500 miles due west at Dark Horse Comics. "We all love it," Schutz said. "Reading Mike Richardson's introduction, the frontispiece to the first issue, will show you how Barry's work made for a major turn in Mike's life. For Mike to be able to publish the work and to show it off at its best is really a dream come true for him."

Windsor-Smith's work seems to have had that effect on many of his fans. In the early '70s, his contraband was the most likely flashlit subject of my own under-cover studies. Today, having long since divested myself of any bagging and categorizing discipline, there are only three carefully ordered boxes in my office with the following labels: "Conan Box 1," "Conan Box 2," and "Conan Box 3." Time and again, it's been Windsor-Smith's work that reinvigorated my fascination with the comics medium.

After confessing that to Schutz, I learned that others, too, had interesting reactions to Barry Windsor-Smith. "I'll never forget when I first met Barry three or four years ago when Dave Sim introduced me," she said. "Dave later said to me that it was the first time that he had ever seen me do the complete 'fangirl-fall-apart.' For a lot of us it's very gratifying to be able to work on the project and to try to do right by Barry."

One glance at the comic book shows that Dark Horse's efforts are paying off. As Ernst Sternberg put it on CompuServe's Comics and Animation Forum: Alone, any one of these strips would be, for me, an automatic must-buy. Together they're wonderfully overwhelming. All in all this is a stunning comic book, a maddeningly visionistic collection of tales that seem to fly in the face of this art form's headlong rush toward simplicity and obviousness. Thank God.

Marilyn Kinch added:

And the art, my God, the art. Goddesses with cherubs, two-page 'Arabian Knights' cities, tavern brawls, and time travel — incredible. But for me, a space ship with dinosaurs topped all. I'd put that page on my wall. Oh, hell, I'd put damn near any of these pages on my wall.

We could devote this entire issue of CBG to analyzing what makes Storyteller stunning: the pacing, techniques, details, "camera work," scripting, and the many other qualities that constitute Windsor-Smith's superlative sequential art. But the one characteristic which, for me, stands out in an age of point-and-click hues is the dazzlingly colorful brush work. Windsor-Smith spent some time describing to me his efforts to maintain control over this aspect of his art, so often "jobbed out" or otherwise devalued by creators, yet so vital, in his eyes, to the finished work.

"The color is so very important to this material, and always has been," he said. "I don't know if you know about this, but I've always colored my own work from Conan #9 in 1972 onward. I'm very stringent about it.

"When I first went to Marvel in '68, there were a couple of colorists that they begrudgingly paid money

"LOL (Laughing Out Loud) too many times to recount ..."

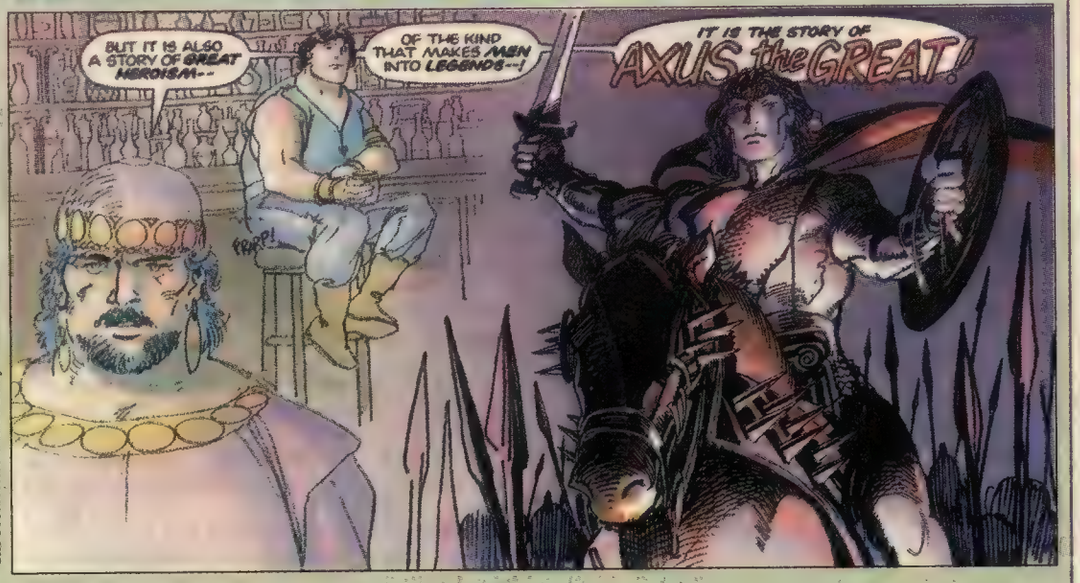
By Bruce Costa

If there is one common thread among the stories, it's Barry Windsor-Smith's excellent sense of humor.

He has a knack for creating hilarious situations with characters who really would not consider themselves comedians.

This is yet another risk he takes — more of one, really. Imagine telling a joke, then not hearing a reaction for more than half a year.

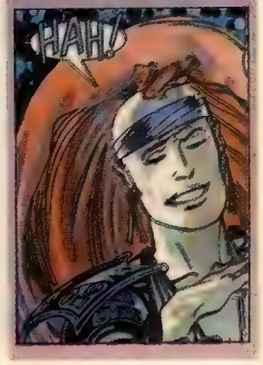
"To hear people say that they laughed out loud to me is just one of the most gratifying things that I've ever known," he said, "because we're seven months ahead here. I write a funny line and nobody's laughing! I've heard actors and directors talk about that. If they're doing live TV or something, there's an instant reaction. But if they're doing a serial that isn't going to get shown until next summer, there's a loss of the live reaction. That's certainly what it's like with this book. One of my tests of whether I've got a funny line is whether my letterer, Joon Kostar, cracks up, as she takes the script away from me. So this has become my test of fire: If I can crack up the letterer, I think I'm doing all right.



BUT IT IS ALSO A STORY OF GREAT HEROISM--
OF THE KIND THAT MAKES MEN INTO LEGENDS--!
IT IS THE STORY OF AXUS the GREAT!
FRRP!
The Freebooters © 1996 Barry Windsor-Smith

"Creating a comic-book character that is going to be humorous [too often involves] making the character itself humorous. That has always seemed to me a telegraph. It's like somebody coming on stage as a clown. From the very point that you first see them you go into a recognition pattern knowing that this man is about to try to make you laugh. The funniest stuff, it seems to me, always comes from the people who are wholly unintended to be funny. Like Axus, who has seen better days. He once was the personification of my Conan. But now he's way overweight and drinks and all sorts of other stuff. This, to me, is the human condition. Axus is not a comedian. He's an older man who happens to do things that are funny. He can't help himself. He's not there on stage being funny for us. We are the lucky people who can watch the slightly sad, slightly ludicrous goings-on of this guy.

"That's what humor is about to me. The characters must have depth. If they don't have depth, they are simply clowns. And who cares if they get into trouble? They become ciphers once they put on a funny red nose."



A crush on a four-color heroine

By Bruce Costa

With my proper Windsor-Smith upbringing and a three-part selection from which to choose, I unconsciously gravitated toward "The Freebooters" storyline in the first issue of Storyteller. Halfway through #2, however, it was clear to me that my favorite character of them all is the rogue princess Adastra. And that was before seeing #3's magnificently uncharacteristic cover! (It's this week's CBG cover.)

A layered, intelligent character, her most plainly endearing characteristic is her wonderfully inappropriate "out-world speak" amid the other gods' prosaic verbosity.

"It is the contrast of it," Windsor-Smith said. "She's not stupid by any means. She knows that everything she says is going to be totally misunderstood or completely outrageous. But she's not pretentious; she's just gonna talk the way she talks. She used to speak like the other gods. She used to do all that 'thee' and 'thou' stuff — all that's gonna come out in the later stories. She got into real big trouble with her mother and was banished from Orgasma for, like, 1000 years. She's been living on Earth for about 600 of those years. Over the years she's been living wherever the best party is! She's been through the Napoleonic Wars. Around the turn of the century she was living in Paris. The best thing that ever happened to her was the 1960s, because she just loved all those drugs and everything, all that free sex. And for the past 20 years she's been hanging out in New York City — although she does go back and forth to Los Angeles at times (depending who's playing at the blues clubs). It's where she got much of her attitude from.

"I really can't wait to continue telling the story of Adastra. Actually, Adastra is the only person I'm really thinking of as a spinoff from Storyteller, because she's really got such a colorful history — all in my head, of course."

to, but mostly Marvel would hand the coloring out to anybody who happened to be standing in the doorway at the time. They simply didn't understand the value of good, creative coloring. I actually saw the bloody secretary coloring an issue of Hulk once just because the phones weren't ringing! I was appalled.

"So everything that you've seen, like 'Weapon X' or Machine Man or those X-Men fill-ins, was all colored by me. Nowadays we are in the midst of what one could call a revolution — or people like me could call it a crisis — of computer coloring. What we're doing with Storyteller is going back to the old-fashioned way. We're copying this stuff onto Arches board and then we color directly onto it. So what you're seeing is actual hand coloring — you know, the real thing, right there, on the board."

He went on to explain the frustration he has experienced on past projects when reproduction turned careful color distinctions into disappointing interpretations.

"Even with 'Weapon X,' which I wrote, drew, inked, colored, lettered all the sound effects, blah blah blah, without any association with any editors whatsoever (because I simply refused to talk to them), they turned around and printed it terribly! I did everything myself, so that the very last bastion that Marvel Comics could find was, 'Hey! Let's print it like @#$%!' And the thing came out looking like a @#$% vaudeville poster instead of having all of the subtle colors I gave it. So it's been a pretty frustrating quarter of a century here. But here's Storyteller: the first time I'm doing it all myself. Nobody's going to stop me."

I asked Schutz what kind of pressure that put on Dark Horse. She laughed, "I was worried! Barry is a tremendous perfectionist, as I am, but this is his comic book. It's one that he's been waiting a long time to do and to do properly. Frankly, the day that the first issue printed, it so happened that I wasn't working. I was worried that I'd just really have to get the hell out of Dodge. [Laughter] And then I thought, no, if there's gonna be a storm let's face it now, so I called Barry from home. In fact, he was effusive in his praise.

"That was very gratifying; a lot of us worked really hard on it here — which is not to say that there are not flaws — we can always do things better. Still, I'd like people to compare the look that we managed to achieve here with some previous publishers' attempts to capture Barry's art. I know that we did it better. Unfortunately, that didn't come cheap; getting that kind of reproduction quality — well, you have to pay for it."

Concerns over the $5 price are natural, especially for an appealing ongoing series with no discernible endpoint. But Schutz said orders have been strong despite this. "Reorders on the first issue have been very good. Initial orders were very good, particularly in light of the fact that it's a high-priced title due to the production format and so on. Critical response has also been very good."

The format has been an even bigger point of contention among those on both sides of the comics-shop cash register: It doesn't fit in a retailer's pocket display and it doesn't fit in a collector's bag or box.

On CompuServe Eric Dacos wrote:

It's been a fun ride so far. Now if only my [local comics] shop would start carrying over-sized bags, everything would be great.

Schutz said, "We chose the same format in which we presented Geof Darrow's work in The Big Guy and Rusty the Boy Robot and Hard Boiled. The reason being, of course, that we wanted to showcase Barry's work as best as possible. Barry does such fine-line, detailed stuff that shrinking it down even more to comic-book size from the original art size: Well, the more you shrink, the more you lose. That 9" x 12 1/2" format seems to be a better showcase for the kind of art that he does."

She paused for a moment, then laughed and added, "I can understand that, yeah, it doesn't fit the comic-book racks, it doesn't fit your comic-book boxes — well, get over it!"

On-line, J. K. Carrier concurred with Schutz's philosophy:

I'm really starting to like [oversized comics]. Three of the best-looking packages this year were BWS: Storyteller, Chris Ware's Acme Novelty Library, and Paul Pope's Buzz Buzz. They're big and substantial — they command attention. I feel like I'm actually getting something for my money, instead of some flimsy throwaway pamphlet with more ads than story. I think trade paperbacks and oversize mags are the wave of the future. This is the sort of package that can get into bookstores, that might attract the attention of non-comics readers. Comics need to get over their inferiority complex. The best artists in this medium deserve a nice package to showcase their work. Wouldn't it be great to see, for instance, the best of Kirby in a format like this?

On America Online Lee Drake wrote:

I love the format of Storyteller. Sure, storing the oversized issue is a bit of a problem, but it's well worth it to see his art in such a large format. The amount of detail in his artwork is astounding, so not having it compacted into the normal comic-book format is a nice touch. I'm definitely going to be back for the next issue. It's such a nice feeling to know that monthly doses of good, solid Windsor-Smith material are here once more!

CBG Price Guide writer Cliff Biggers added:

There aren't too many artists whose work can stand up to larger reproduction. In the case of Barry Windsor-Smith's work, though, the larger art lets me more fully appreciate the fine detail. I wish that they'd print it even larger still!

Windsor-Smith told me that he finds such praise immensely rewarding. Still, he realizes the risk he's taking.

"I'm doing my best to finally walk that thin line and get to the other side, like someone on a tightrope," he said. "I don't want to fall — but if I fall, I fall. I so want to get to the other side, however. I want to produce a comic book that adults are not embarrassed to mention that they pick up. Big stuff, you know? I'm asking for trouble all the way down the line."

THE SPIRIT — WHO KILLED COX ROBIN #3 — WILL EISNER

VERY WELL, I SHOULD BE ABLE TO SOLVE THE CRIME WITHOUT MOVING FROM THIS CHAIR!
NOW, THE DAINTY, PEARL-HANDLED .25, CLEARLY BELONGED TO HER! THE CIGARETTES IN THE ASH-TRAY HAVE NO LIPSTICK MARKS... INDICATING THAT SHE WASN'T IN THE ROOM LONG!
SHOT?
STABBED! THE EMPTY CARTRIDGE CASE IS TOO BIG TO BE A ".25"... MORE LIKELY TO BE A ".45"..... COMPARE THE OPENINGS TO THE MUZZLE OF THE GUN!
I SEE! THAT INDICATES HER GUN WAS A PLANT!
BUT THE RING... YOU'VE OVERLOOKED THE RING!
© 1991 WILL EISNER

Jae Lee returns

An ongoing 'Hellshock' series begins in January

By Alan Bratton

It was 1992 when an 18-year-old artist substituted for John Byrne on Namor, The Sub Mariner. His work was a strange melting pot of influences which included Bill Sienkiewicz, Simon Bisley, and Dave McKean. This eclectic mixture matured after a few issues under somebody else's inks and very soon after bloomed fully when he gained artistic control. It didn't take long for the readers who witnessed that sudden eruption of talent to spread the news. Later, Jae Lee was consecrated as a fan-favorite, due to his work on such titles as Youngblood Strikefile and WildC.A.T.S Trilogy. Then came Hellshock, a mini-series which he created, wrote, and drew. After a two-year absence, Lee returns in January with an ongoing Hellshock series from Image Comics.

CBG: Who is Hellshock?

Jae Lee: Well, Hellshock isn't the name of any character in the comic book. Just the title. The main character is Daniel. He has the ability to see into the land of the dead. He is privy to things man was not meant to know. These visions and delusions drive him insane. He doesn't know why this is happening to him. Then one day, it's as if a fog has lifted. He realizes now that he knows the secrets of the universe: the truth about Creation, about God, about everything. It's what Daniel does with this gift that sets up the Hellshock storyline.

CBG: Hellshock was originally a four-issue mini-series. Aside from covers and trading cards, that was the last work you did. Was this a planned sabbatical?*

Lee: I wanted to follow up the mini-series with an ongoing, monthly title. But in order to follow through with that kind of commitment, there were several things I had to do. I had to work on my writing, my artwork needed an overhaul, and the premise for the storyline had to be rock solid. I wanted the new series to be on a grander scale.

Think of it as a big-budget movie sequel: better actors, bigger special effects, all of which takes time. I'm trying to tell an epic story of fallen angels and forbidden love and the secrets of Creation. But it's difficult to do a story implementing a cast of thousands without a definitive outline of how I think the story should progress and, ultimately, how it should end.

CBG: Would you say that you're building a strong foundation and methodically putting the pieces together on top of that?

Lee: That's a way of looking at it.

CBG: Is the horror-mystery tone of the comic book similar to the mini-series?

Lee: Well, I'm trying. The thing is: It's very difficult to do a horror comic book. It's one thing to see a killer jumping out from behind a door in a movie, but when you see it in a comic book, no matter how well drawn it is, it's not going to have the same effect. I can't rely on cheap tricks or scare tactics. The thing to do is come up with ideas that would send chills down your spine. To have the horror element emanating, not from the images that you see on the page, but the images you create for yourself in your own thoughts.

CBG: There's also a love story — a forbidden one, at that?

Lee: Right. Between an angel and a mortal woman.

CBG: I can't help but draw an analogy to interracial couples. Was this intentional?

Lee: I think if a fictional story contains elements people can relate to in real life, it makes the characters more believable. It gets the reader more involved in their struggles, because he can understand where the characters are coming from. I want to take real-life situations and make a turn for the bizarre and unearthly — sort of like modern fairy tales.

CBG: Is character development a big concern for you?

Lee: I think it's the most important element. After all, who wants to read about predictable one-dimensional characters who go through the motions and follow a predetermined course mandated by the plot? The characters become nothing more than puppets.

CBG: You mentioned that you had the storyline mapped out to its ultimate conclusion. By doing so, aren't you by your own admission, guilty of the same?

Lee: To an extent, but the outline I have is subject to change. In all probability, by the time the whole thing's done, the final story may have little resemblance to the initial outline. As the characters grow, I may decide certain things are inappropriate and follow a new course. Who knows? But that's what I like about it: the unpredictability.

CBG: You also mentioned a change in your art. Your work first underwent a major transformation when you started inking yourself on Namor. You seemed to favor a more visual style over conventional storytelling techniques. You came around at a time when storytelling seemed to take a back seat to bombastic layouts and hyper-exaggerated figures typical of artists of your generation. Do you see this trend continuing?

Lee: As long as there's still an audience for it. When this wave started, only a handful of artists were doing it and it was a blast to see something so outrageous and unconventional. But when you see everybody doing it, it kills it. Now, everybody seems to be into retro — not just in comics, but in fashion and movies, etc. Now when someone does storytelling, people say "Wow. Look at that. Storytelling." I guess people didn't miss it until it was gone.

CBG: Storytelling is invisible. When it works, it doesn't call attention to itself. Until it's missing. Are you addressing this issue in your own work?

Lee: Absolutely.

CBG: What made you change?

Lee: It's changed with my emotions. Back then, I was starting out, I was full of vigor. I just spilled ink all over the place and cleaned up. That's what I used to call inking. If the anatomy was incorrect, it didn't bother me. It was raw. It was energetic. That's what I got off on: the rush.

But now, maybe it's a sign of maturity, there's more thinking behind the art. Elements of storytelling, implementation of backgrounds, establishing mood, emotion, realism, anatomy. It's kind of like having an extended family. There's a lot more to worry about. After all, it's just not my art that I have to worry about any more, it's the overall story.

CBG: So it's when you began writing for yourself when you realized how important it is for the art to reflect the subtle nuances called for in any good story.

Lee: Exactly. In the past, I looked at it from an artist's perspective. It's all too easy to isolate the two disciplines when you have no experience in one of them. It's a classic example of trying on someone else's shoes to see how they fit.

CBG: Which do you think is more important, a good story or good art?

Lee: Both. I think attractive art acts as a solicitor saying, "Hey, look at me. I'm pretty." But after that initial thrill, there has to be some substance behind the art for you to keep your interest up. Without an engaging storyline, readers may not be around a couple issues later.

On the other hand, you can have the best story in the world, but, if it's showcased by bad art, it's difficult to wade through that disfiguring veneer to discover a gem of a story. Then the only way left for that story to call attention to itself is by word of mouth alone. But once in a while, when the stars and planets are properly aligned, you get a rare combination of both.

CBG: Were the planets properly aligned while you were working on Hellshock?

Lee: I think Jupiter was getting out of line, but I gave him a swift kick in the butt.

Reflections on Mid-Ohio-Con

By Roger Stern

I've been attending Mid-Ohio-Con for years now. Just how many, I don't quite recall — but I think Reagan was president when I made my first guest-appearance. I believe that the only time I ever missed one was when a pesky flu bug interfered.

Why do I keep going? The answer is simple: Roger and Jane Price keep plying me with merchandise. With my attractive Mid-Ohio-Con pen, I'm able to fill out the FedEx air bills that — now it can be told — are what really keep Superman flying.

That handsome Mid-Ohio-Con coffee mug holds not only your favorite beverages, but also a goodly assortment of pencils.

And, thanks to Rog and Jane, I haven't had to buy a new T-shirt in years. Heck, a few more Mid-Ohio-Con baseball jackets, and I could field my own minor league team.

Seriously, though, my wife, Carmela Merlo, and I attend Mid-Ohio-Con every year because it's a lot of fun. We get to see friends and fellow professionals whom we don't see nearly often enough. And we get to meet and talk with a great bunch of fans who really and sincerely love comics as much as we do.

What more could anyone ask for?

The two Rogers — Stern (left) and Price (right) — will be at Mid-Ohio-Con.

Mid-Ohio-Con: From the hangar to High Street

By Beau Smith

Mid-Ohio-Con: When those words are spoken, a ton of memories flood through my cell-depleted brain. (All good memories, I might add.) I can use Mid-Ohio-Con as a timetable for my own career in the comics industry, from going as a fan and looking for comics from my never-ending childhood to my current sled doggin' act as director of marketing and promotions for Todd McFarlane Productions and writer of comic books.

As I said, the memories are all good.

For some people the change of season means leaves turning colors, birds singing, a hot summer sun beating down from above, or the falling of snow. It is the last-named that always let me know that Mid-Ohio Con was here. Almost without fail, every time I went to Mid-Ohio-Con — in Mansfield or Columbus — no sooner had my suitcase hit the bed than there would be flakes of snow falling outside my window. That meant Mid-Ohio-Con has begun. I like that.

Throughout the many years that my thuggish band of friends and I have made the con, we have always been treated like the kings and leg-breakers we are. Roger Price has always been there to roll out the red carpet with a smile and a kind word. It didn't matter if I was the fan on the street or the pro wielding the McFarlane scepter of power, he was always a kind and generous host.

Beau Smith

When my friends Chuck Minsker, Clint McElroy, and I were doing our radio or TV comics show — Comicast and Comics Vision, Roger always made sure that we got to interview the hot shots of the day: John Byrne, George Pérez, Frank Miller, Kevin Eastman, and even my now-boss and overlord, Todd McFarlane. It made me feel good to know that, if he was treating me that well, then he must have been extending that same smile and help to others. A big tip of the cowboy hat goes to my friend, Roger Price.

Some of my best memories are of when we would get a couple of adjoining rooms at whatever hotel we hadn't been barred from yet — and spend endless hours talking about comics, films, women, beer, and subjects that aren't for the young at heart. The usual list of suspects were like a who's who of the manly men of comics: Chuck Dixon, Flint Henry, Tim Harkins, Ron Frenz, and Gary Kwapisz. A meaner bunch of semi-Viking raiders you've never seen. The local pizza and carryout joints were terrorized by our lack of manners and compassion. Room service brought up our orders like a man carryin' a case of nitro. It was the good life.

Here it is many years later, and I still look forward to Mid-Ohio-Con with the same enthusiasm of a kid at Christmas. It's a great chance for me to impose my ways on new and old comic-book readers alike — a chance to shove some of the "Miss Nancy Boy" creators of the comics industry around like a playground bully at noon. And for those who have grown old and bitter about the comic-book world, it's a chance for me to drop the gloves and say, "Quit your cryin'. Let's go at it."

Mid-Ohio-Con is the place to be, if you wanna have a great time and catch a buzz from the smell of old comics. Plus, if you want the real history of Mid-Ohio-Con instead of the twisted one I just gave ya, check with Roger Price, Tony Isabella, and Bob Ingersoll. Those boys will set ya straight.

I sure do miss the hangar at the old fairgrounds.

"Roger Price is a good guy."

A rare truthful statement from a former attorney of a certain CBG columnist.

Life is seldom as tidy as we might like. One of the foulest creatures I have ever known did me the great favor of introducing me to Roger Price, the creator and promoter of Mid-Ohio-Con, thus proving, I suppose, that there is, indeed, some good in everyone.

Or that life is just so darned full of irony it makes you want to take it out back and whack it with a really big stick a few dozen times. But I digress.

Since that first meeting, Roger has become one of my bestest buddies and Mid-Ohio-Con has become my favorite comics convention in the whole entire universe. I've been a guest at 14 Mid-Ohio-Cons in a row. Only John Byrne, with 15 appearances in the show's 17-year history, tops that record.

What draws me back to Mid-Ohio-Con year after year? I mean, besides the photographs Roger has of myself, Madonna, and several unidentified persons dressed as breakfast foods.

It starts, as do all good things, with the people. Roger is one of the friendliest and most gracious hosts in comicdom. Over the course of each show, he makes his more than 100 guests and several thousand fans feel as though they are truly a part of the event. Over and over, I've seen him extend that extra smidgin of courtesy to a fan, guest, or volunteer-in-need, and, in doing so, set the standard for the person's Mid-Ohio-Con experience.

Everybody seems to follow Roger's lead. The fans who attend Mid-Ohio-Con are affable and polite. The guests check their egos at the door. The volunteers keep things going smoothly. The result is a delightful amalgam of big convention and neighborhood picnic. Throw another burger on the grill, Rog.

The Mid-Ohio-Con guest list has always included a remarkable range of talents. This year, as always, the show plays host to: legendary Golden and Silver Age creators like Murphy Anderson, Irwin Hasen, Sheldon Moldoff, and Julius Schwartz; contemporary favorites like John Byrne, James Hudnall, Jeff Smith, and Mark Waid; and amazing new voices like Mark Crilley and David Yurkovich.

When I go over the guest list, there's always a delicious sense of expectation. I should almost make a checklist of what I want to say to people so I don't forget anything.

• I have to tell Dick Ayers what a genuine kick it is for this old Marvel fan to see him drawing David Allikas' Dr. Wonder book.

It's a comic book very much in the style of, you guessed it, those old Marvels I loved and still love so much.

• I have to thank my Medina neighbor Tom Batiuk for the signed copy of Attack of the Band Moms (NLP Marketing, $6.95), the sixth Funky Winkerbean collection starring Harry L. Dinkle, the World's Greatest Band Director, and then ask him if he remembers that one of the very funny strips reprinted therein has a punchline he got from a Tony's Tips! column. You owe me a Pepsi, Tom.

• I know I'll hate myself in the morning, but I have to corner John Byrne and praise his 1940s Batman and Captain America one-shot. I read this action-packed adventure a few months back, and it is simply not to be missed. John says it was the most fun he's ever had in comics. I say it's all that and a contender for best graphic album of the year.

• I'm looking forward very much to meeting Mark Crilley, whose Akiko has become a way of life with the Isabella family. I can't think of too many things I love more than curling up in a big old rocking chair with Eddie and Kelly and reading Crilley's tales of the courageous Akiko on the strange planet of Smoo. My voice for Gax the Robot always earns a good laugh from them, and there ain't no better sound in the world.

• Costume designer and writer Anastasia Heonis will be on hand at the World Famous Comics table. Since she's usually armed with this or that weapon — talk about your killer accessories — I should make sure I compliment her on the first issue of her Dream Crashers comic book.

• I'll also have to tell Paul Jenkins I enjoyed his two-part "In the Line of Fire" story from Hellblazer #107 and #108. One doesn't usually expect to get a warm feeling from Vertigo titles, but our pal from London pulled it off. Besides, it will give me a chance to hit him with a nasty quote I've been saving for just the right opportunity. It comes from the episode of The Drew Carey Show in which a Brit was hired as Drew's boss.

"They come over here and they steal our jobs — those Channel-digging, giant-rock-building, mad-cow-breeding, room-temperature-beer-drinking sconeheads!"

• Creator Bill Knapp will be at the con to promote The Furies, his premiere venture into self-publishing. I've already told him I liked the first two issues, but I figure on steering some of my Friends of Lulu and yours his way. I think they'll enjoy Knapp's spiffy super-heroine team as much as I did.

• Jeff Mariotte of Wildstorm Productions will be there. He is also the writer of Hazard, a sort of hardboiled super-hero series with a lot of character and heart. There will also be some other Image Comics creators at the con. I'm looking forward to talking with them, as well.

• I have to check out the "new" kids on the comics block, too.

After all, Caliber Comics is publishing some of the coolest comic books around, and I'm very excited about its "all-ages" Tapestry line. Could be just what the industry needs.

• I confess I've never read any Chaos! Comics titles, but, boy, do they have a faithful following. This, I think, bears closer investigation.

• I have to ask Legionnaires writer Roger Stern who dreamed up one of the most clever retcons in DC history. I wouldn't want to blow the surprise, but it involves a new/old member of the Legion of Super-Heroes who rejoined the team in issue #43. Check it out; the Legion hasn't been this good in decades.

• Don't let me forget, as I did all during last year's show, to tell Brinke Stevens how good she was in the movie Mommy. What a terrific performance. I can't wait to see the sequel.

• Mid-Ohio-Con holds a lot of terrific memories for me. I met Eddy Newell, the artist on my most recent Black Lightning run, at one of Roger's shows. We'll be getting together to work on a new creation or two at this year's event.

In recent years, I've made a lot of friends via CompuServe's Comics and Animation Forum and other online groups. Many of them were at last year's Mid-Ohio-Con and are returning to this year's show. More memories waiting to be made.

Why not share some with me? I'll be hanging with CBG Editor Maggie Thompson and advertising sales guy Jim Owens at the Krause Publications booth. Don't be a stranger.

Tony Isabella is too busy working on his checklist to remind you that Mid-Ohio-Con is on Thanksgiving weekend, Nov. 30 and Dec. 1, at the Hyatt Regency Hotel in Columbus. Mid-Ohio-Con is "Ohio's best comic-book show." Ask for it by name.

You can write to Tony at: Tony's Tips, P.O. Box 1502, Medina, OH 44258. He can't answer every letter or package he gets, but, if you include a self-addressed, stamped envelope, he'll fill it with all sorts of terrific stuff that has collected in, on, and around his desk.

Mid-Ohio-Con supports Ronald McDonald Houses

Mid-Ohio-Con has always actively supported a number of worthwhile causes; nearly $1 million has been raised in the past 17 years for charitable organizations.

Currently, Mid-Ohio-Con is proud to be among the largest corporate contributors supporting the Columbus, Ohio, Ronald McDonald House. The con supports this "home away from home" for families of seriously ill hospitalized children by holding an auction of original art and rare collectibles. Some this year's auction items include:

• An original sketch created by Murphy Anderson during the show.

• An original page of painted art from Spawn the Impaler by Rob Prior.

• Original art and other collectibles from John Byrne, Tom Batiuk, Roger Stern, Sheldon Moldoff, and other celebrity guests.

Following the auction is the annual costume dance party. Prizes will be awarded for best costumes. Both events take place Nov. 30 with the auction beginning at 5:30 p.m. followed by the party from 7:30 p.m. until midnight.

The auction is presented with support from the Columbus Convention Center Mall with free admission to the general public. The costume dance party (admission $3 at the door) will have as hosts The Laughing Ogre and The Hyatt Regency with music provided by Michael Hayes from WYHT's "Breakfast Jam."

GOLD & SILVER AGE BARGAIN BIN

A special section featuring pre-1980 comics at $10 or less!

The Gold & Silver Age Bargain Bin appears in CBG on a quarterly basis. Bargain Bin ads must feature only pre-1980 comics priced at $10.00 or less. The cost for each Super Trader ad in the Bargain Bin section is just $50.00, that's over 50% off the regular rate! Bargain Bin ads are designed by the advertiser on 8½"x8½" paper. We reduce the ad to 5"x5" size. We do no typesetting on Bargain Bin ads. There is no limit on how many Bargain Bin ads an advertiser may take. Please call the CBG advertising department for more information: 715-445-2214.

GOLD & SILVER AGE BARGAIN BIN

A special section featuring pre-1980 comics at $10 or less!

The Gold & Silver Age Bargain Bin appears in CBG on a quarterly basis. Bargain Bin ads must feature only pre-1980 comics priced at $10.00 or less. The cost for each Super Trader ad in the Bargain Bin section is just $50.00, that's over 50% off the regular rate! Bargain Bin ads are designed by the advertiser on 8½"x8½" paper. We reduce the ad to 5"x5" size. We do no typesetting on Bargain Bin ads. There is no limit on how many Bargain Bin ads an advertiser may take. Please call the CBG advertising department for more information: 715-445-2214.

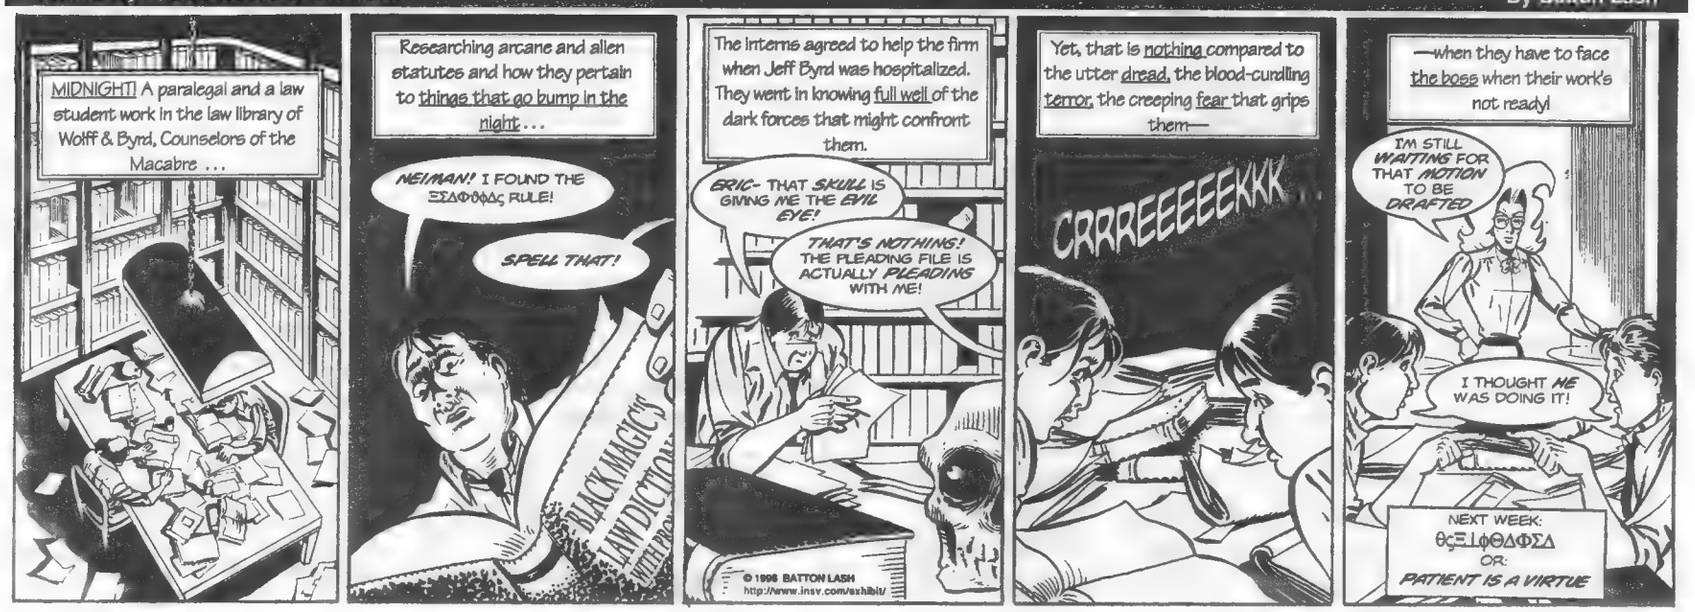
Wolff & Byrd, Counselors of the Macabre — By Batton Lash



MIDNIGHT! A paralegal and a law student work in the law library of Wolff & Byrd, Counselors of the Macabre ...
Researching arcane and alien statutes and how they pertain to things that go bump in the night...
NEIMAN! I FOUND THE ΞΣΑΦΦΑΣ RULE!
SPELL THAT!
BLACK MAGIC'S LAW DICTIONARY
The interns agreed to help the firm when Jeff Byrd was hospitalized. They went in knowing full well of the dark forces that might confront them.
ERIC- THAT SKULL IS GIVING ME THE EVIL EYE!
THAT'S NOTHING! THE PLEADING FILE IS ACTUALLY PLEADING WITH ME!

Yet, that is nothing compared to the utter dread, the blood-curdling terror, the creeping fear that grips them—
CRRREEEEEEKKK
—when they have to face the boss when their work's not ready!
I'M STILL WAITING FOR THAT MOTION TO BE DRAFTED
I THOUGHT ME WAS DOING IT!

Trader Tips

The Trader ads in CBG are an easy and economical way to advertise. Simply design your ad in a space that is 8½" wide by 8½" high and send it along with payment ($39.00 per Trader space) and complete reference form to:

COMICS BUYER'S GUIDE
Advertising Department
700 E. State Street
Iola, WI 54990-0001

We'll reduce your ad to the proper size and place it in the issue(s) you request. If no specific issue(s) is requested, we'll run your ad in the next available issue.

Keep in mind that the better your ad looks when you send it to us, the better it will look when it is reduced and published in CBG.

The advertisers' index is provided as a reader service. Occasional last minute changes may result in ads appearing on pages other than those listed here. The publisher assumes no liability for omissions or errors.

GENERAL INFORMATION

A. PAYMENT: Ads must be accompanied by payment. You may pay with a check, money order, or credit card.

B. CREDIT CARDS: We will accept the following credit cards: VISA, MasterCard, American Express, Discover.

C. DEADLINE: For all advertising is 4:00 p.m. each Tuesday, unless otherwise stated on deadline card.

D. TERMS: Cash with copy only. All advertisers must provide information for the confidential use of the publisher should questions arise.

E. CONTRACT RATES are available for 6, 13, 26, or 52 consecutive issues. Contract rates apply to fulfillment of contract items. Cancellation of a contract by the advertiser allows the publisher to reinvoice covered ads at the earned rate. This rate card is a part of the advertising contract.

F. MINORS are required to furnish a statement of responsibility from their parent or guardian before their advertising can be accepted.

G. ERRORS: Typewritten copy is recommended. The publisher is not responsible for errors resulting from long-hand or illegible copy, or changes submitted by telephone. The publisher's liability for any error shall not exceed the cost of the space occupied by that error.

H. LAYOUT and design services are provided by Krause Publications for advertisers who do not submit camera-ready copy. Due to the creative and subjective nature of these services, credit will not be allowed for conceptual variations.

I. GRADING: Items offered in any ad must be properly described as to condition, conforming to the standards set forth in Comics Buyer's Guide Price Guide. Advertisers may also exercise the option of grading offerings by applying a unique personal system, providing the standards applied are detailed in the ad to avoid confusion.

J. RETURN PRIVILEGE: Except as otherwise specified in any ad, an advertiser must accept the return of any merchandise postmarked within ten working days of its receipt by a customer.

K. P.O. BOX ADS are allowed, but the permanent home address, phone number and place of business of the advertiser must be filed with the publisher before advertisements may be printed.

L. SPECIAL PAGE POSITIONS are available at a premium, inquire for details.

M. ADVERTISING AGENCIES: There are no agency discounts.

N. CAMERA READY display ads qualify for a 15% discount. Copy must be ready for camera without additional paste-up or film work required. No charge for reproductions, enlargements or mail response key change. Classified Display, Comics Trader, Collector's Showcase and classified word ads do not qualify for the camera ready discount.

O. SPACE RESERVATIONS available for camera ready ads only. Must be made prior to ad deadline. Reserved space must be paid for even if ad does not arrive on time.

P. PRE-PRINTED INSERTS are available in Comics Buyer's Guide. Inquire for additional information and technical specifications.

Q. CIRCULATION is throughout the United States and Canada by subscription and single copy sales by agents in shops and other outlets.

R. PROOF OF PUBLICATION: Tear sheets of new display ads are mailed to those advertisers requesting this service. We regret we cannot provide this service to classified advertisers.

S. NOTE: All advertising orders are accepted subject to the terms and provisions of the current rate card. Krause Publications, Inc. reserves the right to decline advertising or suspend advertising privileges for such periods of time as in its discretion it sees fit, for any reason, whatsoever, irrespective of the validity of the reasons for such declination or suspension. The forwarding of an order is construed as acceptance of all rates and conditions in effect at the time the advertising is submitted. The publisher will not be bound by any conditions, printed or otherwise, appearing on any order for advertising space, billing instructions or copy instructions which conflict with its policies. Advertisers and advertising agencies assume liability for all content (including text representation and illustrations) of advertisements printed, and also assumes responsibility of any claims arising therefrom made against the publisher. It is the advertiser's or agency's responsibility to obtain appropriate releases on any item or individual pictured in their advertising. All agreements are subject to strikes, accidents, acts of God, or other contingencies beyond the publisher's control. The publisher reserves the right to edit any advertising copy to conform with its standard advertising policies, and to reject any ad which in its opinion is unethical or objectional for any reason.

Concluding my travel journal of my trip to the Salon Internacional in Spain: It was Saturday, Oct. 12, at the Haxtur Awards ceremony, and I'd just been presented with an award for Best Script for Incredible Hulk #420.

Harlan Ellison has stated that all the excuses for one's actions, from exceeding the speed limit to infidelity, really boils down to one: It seemed like a good idea at the time.

So there I was up on stage in a packed auditorium.

The convention organizers had flown me several thousands miles to give me a solid bronze statue. I figured I should say or do something memorable, rather than just smile, wave, and exit. But I've never been terribly good at giving acceptance speeches for awards.

There are many people to whom awards mean nothing. I am not one of those people. Such recognition means a lot to me, and I usually get choked up or tongue-tied upon receiving them. Getting tongue-tied and depending upon Sofia to sort out what I was saying seemed problematic. But there she was on stage, asking me if I wanted to say something.

And before I had time to think about the wisdom of my actions, I leaned forward into the podium mike and said, slowly and carefully, "I would like to say 'thank you' in what I am told is a traditional Spanish method."

And I stepped back from the podium and did the Macarena. Not that there was any music or anything. I just went through the arm movements and did the hip swivel.

The place went absolutely nuts. Even though I had not waited for a translation to be made, clearly enough of the audience understood the gist of what I'd said.

I exited the stage quickly with the applause sweeping over me, figuring that — at the very least — I'd provided an amusing anecdote for those who were in attendance.

After the awards were given out, I was once again reminded of one of the perks of not being an artist: The artist guests were brought up on stage and, as is tradition at the convention, each rendered a sketch on a gigantic piece of paper. Sketches from previous years' guests, such as a Walt Simonson Thor (shouting "Hola!") and a Joe Kubert Tarzan, looked down from on high as the artists did their stuff in front of an appreciative audience. The most ambitious was Bryan Talbot, who was on stage for a good 20 minutes after the other artists had left, rendering an incredibly detailed armored figure from, I think, Judge Dredd.

After the ceremony was over, it was time for the massive "final dinner" of the convention. Many people converged on a massive hotel restaurant that had a large dining room reserved for the occasion. Various artists were doing sketches in books and on napkins. I handed Art Adams a small heel of bread and asked him to draw "Judge Bread." With a fine-point marker, he promptly drew a perfectly serviceable Judge Dredd helmet on the crust. It looked pretty sharp. I should have it lacquered or something to make sure it doesn't disintegrate.

It was the final night to party, so after dinner a group of us went to a disco. And we stayed out ... and out ... and out ...

By the time I was crammed into the back seat of a car heading back to the hotel, it was coming up on 5:30 a.m. Sofia wanted to check out other night spots, and the rest of the passengers in the car, including Art, were more than up for it. Me, I'd had it. I was dropped off in front of the hotel where I stood and watched the car drive away.

I headed to my room. I still had a little bit of energy left, so I got some scripting done. By the time I dropped into bed it was a quarter to seven in the morning. Of all things, Babylon 5 was on TV. It was the second hour of the original pilot film — dubbed, naturally, into Spanish. I watched 10 minutes of it, and my eyes closed.

The phone rang, jolting me awake. I sat up so fast the room spun around me. I was so confused that I thought, "Gotta get the phone before it wakes up the kids," forgetting for a moment that the kids were on the other side of the Atlantic. I lunged for the phone and almost put my fist through the wall lamp.

"Hello," said Myra over the phone. "This is your wake-up call."

I wondered how long I'd been asleep. I looked at my watch. It was 7 a.m. I'd been asleep for five minutes. Back home it was the middle of the night, but Myra had gotten in late and, knowing I'm usually an early riser, figured there was no harm in giving me a call.

Trying to remember how to make my mouth work, I said, "Oh ... good. Thank you."

I flopped back on the pillow and tried to focus on what she was saying.

"You sound very relaxed," she said.

"Yeah, well, a good night's sleep will do that for you," I replied.

Sunday, Oct. 13: The previous evening (or morning — it's all started to blend together) a group of us had decided that we'd meet for lunch about 2 p.m. We met down in the lobby, as planned. Art was nowhere in sight. We didn't want to just ditch him, so I called his room. Art answered the phone in a tone that was very familiar to me: He sounded like I had when my wife called.

"Hi, Art. We were all supposed to meet down here and we're wondering if you're joining us. We didn't want to just head out to lunch and have you show up five minutes late, wondering where we all got off to."

There was dead silence on the other end for a moment. "Who is this?" asked Art.

"This is Peter David."

I paused. There was no reply.

"I write Incredible Hulk," I offered helpfully.

"Oh."

I woke you up, didn't I, Art?" I said, Mr. Quick-on-the-Uptake. "Look, if you want to go back to sleep, just say so."

Another long pause.

"I'm going back to sleep," he said.

I hung up and hoped to God that Art would go back to sleep without remembering me, because otherwise he was probably going to hate my guts.

I turned around, and several of the convention organizers were there. I was shown a local newspaper called El Comercio, which, as it turned out, had full-page coverage of the Haxtur Awards ceremony. It was apparently a very big deal in Gijon. There was a big picture of Paul Gulacy and the (now slumbering) Art Adams doing their sketches, and there was a shot of Roy Thomas applauding with his eyes closed.

And I was there with my hands on my head. Doing the Macarena.

"Oh, Jesus," I muttered.

I skimmed the article. There was a whole paragraph about me doing the stupid dance.

"Must have been a slow news day," I muttered.

We went to the restaurant where we were to have lunch. We passed a newsstand. I figure I'd pick up a copy of the local newspaper to amuse the family back home. I got the other local paper, too, La Nueva Espana, to see if there was any coverage of the convention in that one.

This one, in addition to full page coverage of the convention, had an entire sidebar with the headline, "Dibujo en vivo y agradecimientos al ritmo de <<Macarena>>." Go translate it for yourself.

There was another picture of me, this time with my hands fully extended in front of myself. I looked like Frankenstein's monster. (Which actually wouldn't be a bad gag when you get down to it: the Monster lurching forward, hands outstretched, and then the music starts playing and he starts doing the Macarena.)

It must have been a re-eeeeeaaaly slow news day. At this point I think I'm pretty much known as Peter "Macarena" David.

At lunch we found that Sofia was speaking in a voice that was merely a gravelly whisper. We took some measure of comfort in this, in knowing that the Iron Woman party animal had human frailty. For the first time since the convention started, she made it clear that she wasn't going to be dancing that evening.

Monday, Oct. 14: I had to leave the hotel at 6:30 a.m. in order to catch my plane home. Although I had driven from Madrid to Gijon, I had no desire to repeat that journey. I'd fly this time, thanks.

Faustino and Sofia drove me to the airport. Her voice had somewhat recovered, and they waited with me until it was time for me to board my plane. They were nothing if not thorough hosts.

Just before I got on the plane, I turned to them and said, "One last time." I stuck out my arms, and Faustino and Sofia grinned and did likewise. And the three of us stood there in the airport and did the Macarena.

Hey — it seemed like a good idea at the time.

Combat Kelly meets Jack Ryan

Back in CBG #486 (March 11, 1983), Don Thompson suggested an apt addition to the fandom lexicon: the "Combat Kelly" ending, an awkward "shock" ending with the potential of negating the reader's involvement in the entire series. Don referred to Marvel's Combat Kelly and the Deadly Dozen conclusion in which everyone important was, figuratively, run over by a truck, but in practical usage the term can be applied to works such as the conclusion to Spider-Woman, or, for that matter, Alien^{3}.

So after being stupefied by the franchise-killer "Combat Kelly" ending to Debt of Honor, Tom Clancy's 1995 Jack Ryan novel, I was surprised to see a sequel on the shelf. Even reading the book-jacket to Executive Orders spoils the end of Honor, but it's enough to say that Honor wreaked such chaos on the Clancy universe that it requires Orders' 900 pages of small print just to deal with the ramifications. Orders pulls it off, while rewarding series fans with major plot references to the six previous Ryan novels.

Neither Jessica Drew nor, we hear, Ripley have been made to suffer their ignominious ends forever, so I guess there could yet be hope for Combat Kelly.
